GAMBETTA AT BORDEAUX.

M. GAMBETTA arrived here today, from Lyons.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE GERMAN ARMIES.

It is asserted that the Prussian authorities, incensed by reports made by correspondents of the English journals with the Prussian armies, have, after treating them very harshly, ordered all of them outside the lines of occupation.

THE FRENCH IN DIJON.

Official dispatches just received announce that the Prussians hastily evacuated Dijon at the approach of the French forces. This is the first result of the campaign undertaken in the east by orders of the War Department, and which was hastened by the exertions of M. GAMBETTA at Lyons.

The Germans evacuated Dijon on the approach of the French. The French now hold the city.

FRENCH PRISONERS ATTEMPT TO ESCAPE.

BERLIN, Dec. 29.—It is stated that the French prisoners confined in the fortresses near the Rhine, conspired to revolt and escape on Christmas Eve, but the project was discovered and defeated.

The Prussian Plan of Bombardment of Paris—Beginning of a General Shelling—Bulletin News—Formidable Resistance of War—Batteries Silenced Taken by the French.

BERLIN, Dec. 29.—The Government organs say that Mont Avron was the first position attacked by the Prussians in order to obtain a stand-point from which to operate against the adjacent outlying forts of Paris.

BEGINNING OF A GENERAL SHELLING.

The Provincial Correspondence adds that the bombardment of Mont Avron may be considered as the introduction to the general shelling of Paris, inasmuch as its capture will greatly facilitate operations against the French capital.

FORMIDABLE DEFENSES.

BORDEAUX, Dec. 29.—The following are official dispatches:

LYONS, Dec. 27.—A balloon from Paris has landed here and the dispatches thereby received have been forwarded to the Government.

The weather is intensely cold, which prevents all movements of the armies.

LYONS, Dec. 28.—The news brought from Paris by balloon mail has been made public. Military operations had been suspended since the 23d inst., in consequence of the intense cold. The population of Paris were full of enthusiasm and confidence over the situation. The French engines of war were daily growing more formidable.

On Monday the mobilized National Guard dislodged a battalion of Saxons from the park of Maison Blanche.

A proclamation has been issued by the Prussian Government placing under blockade all the ports of France now occupied, or hereafter captured by the German forces.

AN ICE BLOCKADE.

The harbor of Kiel is closed by ice.

The French Government has sent a formal complaint to the Cabinet of Vienna concerning the employment of the rolling stock of Austrian railways for South German military purposes. The result is the appointment by the authorities of commissioners to inquire into the truth of the charges preferred by France.

VERSAILLES, Dec. 28.—Mont Avron is silent today, but the forts in the neighborhood reply to the fire of the German guns.

VERSAILLES THREATENED.

BORDEAUX, Dec. 29.—Advices from Paris state that new fortifications have been completed by the French beyond Mont Valérien, which throw shells beyond Versailles. That city is therefore now considered untenable for the Prussians.

FROM PARIS BY BALLOON.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—Advices from Paris by balloon have been received down to 4 o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, the 27th.

A VIGOROUS DEFENSE.

The citizens and soldiers were in excellent spirits, and were still determined on a vigorous defense.

THE COLD—PREPARATIONS FOR A SIEGE.

The intensely cold weather had suspended military operations in good part. Preparations were, however, making on a large scale, and important results were looked for. These preparations had imbued the inhabitants with increased confidence.

DISLODGEMENT OF A SAXON BATTALION.

The Saxon battalion had been dislodged at Maison Blanche.

The French Not Defeated at Beaune-la-Rolande—Heavy German Losses in the North and North-east—18,000 Wounded at Chalons-sur-Marne—Blockade.

LILLE, Dec. 27, via BOURBEAUX, Dec. 28.—Official contradiction is given to the dispatches of the Prussians, which falsely represent the battle of Pont Noyelles as a German victory, and claim to have taken some French troops prisoners. Not a single Frenchman was captured.

GERMAN LOSSES.

The Prussians have lost heavily in battle and from sickness in the north and north-east of France. The villages are encumbered with German wounded. Great numbers of the German soldiers are suffering from opthalmia. There are 18,000 sick and wounded Germans at Chalons-sur-Marne.

AID FOR MANTEUFFEL.

It is reported that the Crown Prince and the Duke of Saxony have been sent to Amiens to assist Gen. MANTEUFFEL. The Germans are now near Cambray. It is said the French Army of the North has left Arras, retreating toward Vitry, and, it was thought, were falling back on their strongholds in the extreme north of France.

EUROPEAN MOVEMENTS.

The Prussians have evacuated the left bank of the Seine. There is still a large force at Yvetot.

Great popular indignation is manifested at this dastardly attempt to murder Gen. PRIM, which so happily failed of success.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Dec. 29.—The eastward-bound night express train on the Missouri Pacific Railroad, ran off the track this morning, at Sugar Station, seventy-five miles west of here. The express and baggage cars were completely wrecked, and Wm. HAYNES, of Atchison, Kansas, express agent, was seriously, and the baggage master slightly, hurt. The accident was caused by the sinking of a rail on which the switch rested. The engine ran some thirty yards over frozen ground, and the express car ran into a freight train on the side track and badly injured its engine, leaving hardly a vestige of itself, while the baggage car was hurled down an embankment. The damage to the train is from $20,000 to $30,000.

HAVANA, Dec. 26.—Advices from San Domingo to Dec. 20 contain the following news:

Gen. CABRAL was in the neighborhood of San Juan with 800 half-starved men, engaged in spreading false reports of the death of Gen. BAEZ. The stories sent via St. Thomas and Puerto Plata concerning revolutionary movements, are mere inventions. The Government of San Domingo accepts. He notes at the Custom-house is seventy per cent discount; but a law has been promulgated that duties shall in future be paid in gold. American specie was plentiful.....The United States steamer Yantic, returning from her trip to assist the laying of the Aspinwall cable, ran ashore at the entrance of the harbor of San Domingo with a full head of steam on. It would be necessary to discharge her armament and coals to get her afloat.....Col. O'SULLIVAN had arrived from France, accompanied by an Englishman, for the purpose of making an examination of the copper beds in San Domingo.

MONTREAL, Dec. 29.—A special dispatch to the Gazette, from Ottawa, says: "The statement made by some papers to the effect that Sir John Rose is about to visit this Continent for the purpose of arranging the fishery question, is incorrect. ST. LOUIS, Dec. 29.—On Monday evening, NAPOLEON BROWN and FRANK DEAN were riding together on a saddle horse, in Platte County, Missouri, when they quarreled, and DEAN stabbed BROWN, inflicting twenty-one wounds, and killing him. Brown, who was aged nineteen years, was a son of Judge THOMAS BROWN, of Buchanan County...."Red Duck," who killed young IRELAND, near Leavenworth, Kansas, a short time since, was found guilty of murder in the first degree, at Leavenworth, yesterday.

HALIFAX, N. S., Dec. 28.—FRANK WOODS, the steward of the "Halifax Club," stabbed himself in four places, and, after bleeding almost to death, threw himself from a window of the third story of the Club-house, and died in a few minutes. He had been disappointed in reference to some occurrence in Prussia.....There is an alarming prevalence of crime here, the offenders being principally juveniles.

His head was horribly crushed with an iron bar, and his boat plundered. Evidently the murder was committed with the purpose of robbing him. No clue has been obtained of the murderer.

THE PACIFIC COAST.

Depredation of the Apache Indians in Arizona—A Heavy Mining Blast—Sixty Thousand Pounds of Powder Exploded at Once.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 29.—The Apache Indians are again active in Arizona, committing many murders and running off large bands of cattle in the neighborhood of Tucson. On the 18th of December a freight train belonging to Messrs. TULLY, OCHOA & DE LONG, en route to Camp Goodwin, was attacked by a large party of Indians thirty miles east of Tucson. After a sharp fight, in which MARTIN RIVERA was killed and two other men of the train wounded, the Indians got away with the oxen. The wounded men were carried to Tucson.....A blast of 60,000 pounds of powder was successfully exploded in Blue Point Gravel Gold Mine this afternoon. A mass of gold-bearing earth, 300 feet square and 75 feet deep, was lifted 20 feet, and completely shattered. This was the greatest mining blast ever fired in California.

THE HUDSON CLOSED.

The River Frozen from Rhinebeck to Albany—Vessels Ice-Bound and Dismanted by their Attempts to Proceed—The War has to be Broken for Them.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Dec. 29.—Intense cold prevails here, and the water in the Hudson is very low. The river is effectually closed from Albany to Rhinebeck, a distance of sixty miles, with ice six inches thick. At Catskill the Knickerbocker and Washington Ice Companies are preparing to harvest the crop. The steamboat Connecticut, in endeavoring to force her way south past Germantown, yesterday, sustained serious damage, her hull being injured, so that it was found necessary to run her on the flats on the West Shore to prevent her from sinking. She is heavily laden with an assorted cargo, which will be forwarded to New-York by the Hudson River Railroad. Gangs of men, with timbers and sheets of iron, have arrived from New-York to repair her injuries. She is now surrounded by huge masses of ice, and will probably remain in her present position until Spring. The steamboat Normich reached here to-night from above. Her Captain states that he ran through six-inch ice for three miles south of Rhinebeck. She is waiting here to break the way through to Rondout for the Big Tom Winkle, which vessel is expected from New-York hourly. The thermometer to-night is 10° above zero.

Removal of Settlers from an Indian Reservation in Kansas.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Dec. 29.—A dispatch from Fort Scott, Kansas, says: Col. MERRILL received orders from the War Department yesterday, instructing him to remove all the settlers from the Miami Indian Reservation, in this State, at once. There are from 3,000 to 4,000 settlers upon those lands. Inoposua, a thriving town of 1,500 inhabitants, is also on the same land, and must share the same fate. The reservation embraces 70,000 acres of the finest land in Kansas, and much of it is well improved, with good houses, farms and growing orchards. This order, it is alleged, has been secured through fraud and misrepresentation by some members of the "Indian Ring," who are said to be interested in having the settlers removed, in order that they may sell the lands and pocket the proceeds. Col. MERRILL goes to Fort Scott, and will be followed by one company of United States cavalry to-morrow.

Arrest of John H. Surratt for an Unpaid Tobacco License.

BALTIMORE, Md., Dec. 29.—JOHN H. SURRATT delivered his lecture at Concordia Hall, tonight, before about 300 persons. He was afterward arrested by a United States Deputy Marshal on a charge of not having paid his license as a tobacco-dealer in this city two years ago. The arrest was made after the lecture had been delivered, the design being, as alleged by his friends, to prevent his lecturing in Washington to-morrow night, as announced. He was taken before United States Commissioner BOWEN, but waived examination, and gave bail in $1,000 for appearance at the March Term of the United States District Court. SURRATT has been in Baltimore some days.

Suspension of the American Flow Company at Boston—Corresponding Frauds Against the Government—Seizures of Tobacco at Lowell, Mass.

BOSTON, Dec. 29.—A meeting of the creditors of the AMERICAN FLOW MANUFACTURING COMPANY, whose suspension is announced, was held today, at which a disposition was manifested in favor of granting an extension of three, six and nine months. The suspension is, in some degree, attributed to the failure of TREADWELL & CO., a large hardware-house of San Francisco.....The Messrs. BOTOS have settled the late charge of importing lastings under false valuation, by paying the Government something over $15,000, the full appreciation of the goods seized. The United States Internal Revenue officers have recently made several important seizures of tobacco and cigars in Lowell. From one manufactory, 40,000 cigars were seized, and 20,000 from other parties, together with 4,000 or 5,000 pounds of leaf tobacco. Similar seizures have been made in other places in this vicinity.

It was voted that all the assets be notified to stop issuing policies, the order taking effect from the hour of its passage. A committee of five was appointed, with the aid of two lawyers, to investigate the affair and report on Saturday morning, Dec. 31, as a basis for further action.

WASHINGTON.

Death of Mrs. Belknap—The Charges against Commissioner Parker—Statement of Rev. Sunderland—Comparative Statement of Revenue Receipts—Various Matters.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29.—Mrs. BELKNAP, wife of the Secretary of War, died at 5:30 this afternoon. She had been sinking rapidly for the past forty-eight hours, and her death had been expected almost any hour during that time. Mrs. BELKNAP was a native of Kentucky, having been born near Louisville in that State, in March, 1835. She was the daughter of the late JOHN TOBLINSON, of Harrisburg, and she was married to Gen. BELKNAP in JANUARY, 1862. The disease from which she died was consumption, and was contracted some years ago, though the malady did not show itself in a formidable shape until within three months past. About two months since she gave birth to a fine boy. She recovered from her confinement only to find herself prostrated by the inroads of the disease which ended her life. It made rapid progress, and some three weeks since her attending physician, Dr. HOMER, U. S. A., pronounced her beyond recovery. She was entirely conscious up to the moment of death. A few moments previous thereto, she called her husband to her side and requested to be raised up. A few moments later she said, "I am dying," and breathed but once or twice after uttering those words. Her widowed sister, Mrs. BOWERS, has been with her for the last few weeks, and receives the care of the little child. The funeral will take place on Sunday, from St. John's Episcopal Church, and the remains will be deposited in a private vault in Oak Hill Cemetery until Spring. It is probable that this occurrence will alter somewhat the programme for the official receptions on New-Year's day. Mrs. BELKNAP was possessed of a rare degree of personal grace and beauty, and her happy, easy manner, together with her qualities of mind and heart, achieved for her, as the very outset, a degree of personal popularity accorded to but few ladies in Washington society.

APPROPRIATION BILLS READY.

The Committee on Appropriations have four bills ready to report to the House after recess, in addition to those already presented. They are the Indian, Navy, Army, and Consular and Diplomatic Bills. The work is nearly completed on all the other bills except the Miscellaneous Appropriation Bill which, as usual, will be delayed till a later day in the session.

CHARGES AGAINST THE INDIAN COMMISSION.

The Subcommittee which is investigating the charge made against the management of the Indian funds, consists of Representatives SARGENT, LAWRENCE and BUCK. Gen. PARKER will not probably return from the council till week after next, and little is known of his defense. His friends believe in his ability to vindicate himself fully. One charge was that certain contracts, in which the prices paid were said to be too high, had not been submitted to the Mission Board, as provided by law. Those contracts will be proved to have been made before the law referred to was enacted.

THE TAX ON THE NEW-YORK CENTRAL.

The decision in the case of the taxes assessed on Mr. VANDERBILT's railroad, which was to have been made Jan. 1 by the Internal Revenue office, has been postponed by Acting Commissioner DOUGLASS for ten days.

THE ROMANCE OF LEE'S SURRENDER.

The image-breakers having demolished the story of WILLIAM TELL and other like pleasant fictions of the past, have come down to a historical incident of recent date, too recent, in fact, for the truth to be thrust carelessly aside, as thousands of witnesses still live, besides one of the principal actors. The formal arrangement and signature of the terms of Gen. Lee's surrender of his army took place in the front room of Mr. McLEAN's house in Appomattox Village, and the interview between Gens. GRANT and Lee occupied about two hours. However, a reporter of the Star had an interview with a bronze image founder of this city, and the latter is represented as giving Gen. GRANT's "true version" of the surrender. This version has been extensively quoted as true. The story it gives about the tent and the tree certainly never came from Gen. GRANT, for there was not a tent within two miles of the house in which the surrender was made, and the tree mentioned is doubtless, one that grew near Vicksburg.

THE WEATHER REPORTS.

The number of places of observation of the Weather Signal Service is increasing, and has now reached thirty. The usefulness of the signals has been sooner demonstrated than was expected, and many times the cost of establishing the service has already been saved the country. Along the Lakes the officers can now confidently predict the approach and violence of a storm from twelve to twenty-four hours in advance of its arrival. The office has evidence that timely warning given of the coming of one of the recent great storms on the Lakes saved property to the value of $1,000,000.

CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Official Instructions to the Collector at the Port of New-York—Operation of New Laws.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 29.—The Secretary of the Treasury today issued the following instructions to the Collector of Customs at New-York:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 28.

SIR: Referring to previous correspondence between this Department and your office relative to the settlement of certain doubtful points arising under the act of July 14, 1870, and the manner in which the provisions of the twenty-sixth section of said act shall be carried into effect, I have to say that upon due consideration of the matter the following instructions are prescribed:

First—The instructions to you of the 3d inst. are hereby modified so as to allow and require the resampling, reweighing, remeasuring and reclassification of goods, wares and merchandise remaining in public store or bonded warehouse on the 1st of January, 1871, in all cases where the classification is radically changed by the act of July 14, 1870, such as sugar, wines, &c., &c., or the act amendatory thereof approved Dec. 22, 1870. Reclassification will in all cases be made where the original classification is insufficient to determine the correct rates of duties to be paid under the new law. Reweighing and remeasuring will also be had in all cases where a portion of an importation has been withdrawn upon average qualities prior to Jan. 1, 1871, and such reclassification, reweighing and remeasuring will be made as soon as practicable after Jan. 1; and the entries be relinquidated accordingly upon your books, so that the exact amount due the United States on each bond may appear.

Second—Goods remaining in public stores or bonded warehouses on the 1st premises, which are by the act of July 14, 1870, placed on the free list, will not be charged with duty under the act of March 14, 1866, even though they may have remained in bond beyond one year from the date of importation, as the additional duties imposed by said act of 1866 are to be levied upon the rates of duty prescribed by the act of July 14, 1870; but upon all goods chargeable with duty under said last-named act, and which have remained in bond beyond said year, the additional duty of ten per centum is to be exacted on the artificial increase of four per centum.

Third—The ad valorem duty of twenty-five per cent. imposed by said act on wines, accrues only on such wines as are valued at over one dollar per gallon.

Fourth—That provision in said act which prohibits the use of opium for smoking, and other purposes of opium, if imported in bonded warehouse, shall not be removed therefrom without payment of duties, and such duties shall not be refunded, applied to entries and withdrawals thereof remaining in store or bonded warehouse Jan. 1, 1871, as well as to importations made after that date.

Fifth—The repeal by said act of the fifty-ninth section of the act of March 2, 1799, operates to prevent any drawback of duties paid prior to the date of said act of July 14, 1870, thereunder upon goods of the character mentioned in said section of the act of 1799, remaining in warehouse Jan. 1, 1871, and the liquidations of such entries will be made accordingly.

Sixth—The provision in said act which declares that any liquors containing more than twenty-two per centum of alcohol, which shall be entered under the name of wine, shall be forfeited to the United States, is held by this Department to apply only to such wines of whatever origin made after the 1st day of January, 1871, and not to wines remaining in warehouse at that date.

Seventh—Your attention is called to the provision in the new tariff which limits the value of the alcohol effects of cordials, or perfumes, importing to the United States, which may be admitted to free entry, to $100, and you will assess and collect duty on any excess beyond that amount.

In case of partial withdrawal upon estimated quantities, duties will be collected at the new rates upon the quantity found by reweighing or regauging to be actually in warehouse on the 1st of January, and as the old rates on the difference between the quantity previously withdrawn, as shown by the records, and that upon which the new rates of duties are paid. In the case of an importation when no withdrawal has been made, and the classification is changed by the new act, duties will be collected at the new rates on the quantity actually in warehouse, as shown by the weighing, &c., and at the old rates on any deficiency which may exist between the quantity originally entered and that in warehouse Jan. 1, 1871. This course is rendered necessary by the fourth section of the act of March 26, 1864. In the case, say of an importation of coffee, when the duty is reduced two cents per pound by the new tariff, and no withdrawal has been made, no reweighing will be had, but the quantity upon which the duties are to be reduced is that shown in the original return of the weigher.

Eighth—Parties entitled to refundment or abatement of duties on goods in bonded warehouse Jan. 1, 1871, under the twenty-sixth section of the act of July 14, 1870, will be required to make written application therefor to the Collector, in duplicate, one copy to be filed in the Collector's office, and the other in the Naval office, setting forth: First, the name of the importer and importing vessel, date of arrival and number of warehouse bonds. Second—Marks and numbers and description of packages remaining in warehouse on which duties have been paid, with amount of such payment. Third—Marks, numbers and description of packages in warehouse for which withdrawals have been passed, but duties not paid, with the amount of duties computed on such withdrawal. Fourth—Marks, numbers and description of packages for which no withdrawals have been passed. Fifth—On teas remaining in warehouse, as above, the number and description of packages in each chop must be designated. Sixth—On sugars and other merchandise in warehouse, the classification of which is changed by the act of July 14, 1870. The original classification must also be designated. Seventh—In cases where damage has been allowed, the statement must indicate whether the damage was allowed upon goods remaining in warehouse Jan. 1, 1871, or upon goods withdrawn before that date. Where damage allowed has been made upon any importation, and a portion only of the goods remains in warehouse, the importer will include in the statement before mentioned an exhibit showing what portion of the goods to which such damage was allowed was withdrawn prior to Jan. 1, 1871, and what portion remains in warehouse on that day; and if such statement shall be found correct, the damage allowance will be apportioned upon the rates of duties in force at the time of the separate withdrawal. Refundment under the said act of duty paid on goods will be made by forwarding to the Department the usual certified statement in each case, and settlement of the same by the accounting officers. To secure uniformity in carrying said law into effect, a copy of this letter will be sent to the Collectors of Customs at the various ports.

I am, very respectfully,

(Signed,) GEO. S. BOUTWELL.

The Fishery Troubles—List of American Vessels Seized by the Canadians.

The Montreal Gazette quotes from a pamphlet by a Canadian reviewing President GRANT's position respecting the fisheries, the following:

MISCONDUCT OF UNITED STATES FISHING VESSELS AMENABLE TO THE IMPERIAL AND CANADIAN CRUISERS DURING 1870, FOR UNLAWFUL FISHING, &c.:

Wesgoodock—Seized 27th June, 1870, at Aspy Bay, Nova Scotia; actively fishing close in shore. Captain of vessel admitted having caught fish within the prohibited limits during the day, and that he was aware he was fishing illegally.

J. Gorham—Seized 6th June, 1870, at Ingonish Island, Nova Scotia, actually fishing inside the island, within a mile distant from shore. Had been previously warned three times, on the 24th, 25th and 27th June, before hand, with notice that vessel would be seized. Captain was personally informed that he had already violated the law by remaining in shore without cause, and was supplied with a copy of Mr. BOUTWELL's circular to American fishermen.

G. Marshall—Seized 21st July, 1870, at Sandy Beach, inside Gaspé Bay, Quebec; actually fishing, and drawing seine ashore. Previously boarded and warned.

Albert—Seized 20th August, 1870, at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island; violation of Merchant Shipping act. Owner, master and crew, by their own plea, own to knowledge of offense.

Clara F. Friend—Seized at Broad Cove, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, actually fishing within three miles of shore. Previously warned. Released by crew and recaptured.

NOTE.—The three returns last above-named were made by Her Majesty's cruisers.

Lettie—Seized 16th August, 1870, inside Gaspé Bay, actually fishing, and having fished for seven days previously within prohibited limits. Had been previously boarded and warned.

Maine A. Tory—Seized 27th August, 1870, at Raven Island, Quebec, about 100 miles inside of the mouth of the River St. Lawrence; actively fishing one-quarter of a mile from shore. Master was aware that the vessel was trespassing. Owner subsequently pleaded for release, on the ground that he had specially directed the master not to go and fish at that place, according to his expressed intention, because he would thereby expose said owner's property to seizure. Master and crew fishing on shares with owner.

A. H. Wonson—Seized 3d September, 1870, near Broad Cove, Isle Wolf Island, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia; actively fishing between island and mainland, distant about one mile and a half from either shore. Previously boarded and warned.

A. J. Franklin—Seized 15th October, 1870, at Broad Cove, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, having fished within prohibited limits. Previously warned on the 7th of October. Captain strenuously denied having fished, and thought boarding officer satisfied that trespass had been committed, he desisted for the time being from seizing on such assurance. Afterward, proof of actual and extensive fishing within the prohibited limits during 14th and 15th was obtained, and the seizure effected on the 15th October.

Granada—Seized 28th November, 1870, at Port Hood, N. S. Smuggling.

Pong—Seized 5th November, 1870, at Bank Bay, N. S., having fished at Grand Manan Island, N. B., within prohibited limits. Master acknowledged being aware of the illegality of such fishing.

White Fawn—Seized 28th November, 1870, at Head Harbor, Campo Bello, N. B., preparing to fish.

THE FRENCH DEMONSTRATION.

Immense Mass-Meeting at the Cooper Institute—Addresses of Gen. Bartlett, John Mitchel, Sidney Sullivan and Others.

The demonstration at the Cooper Institute last night, under the auspices of the French Central Club, in behalf of Republican France, was an immense affair.

Long before the hour appointed for the opening of the proceedings, the large hall was filled to overflowing with an audience of many Frenchmen, more Americans, and still more Irishmen. The members of the French Central Club acted as a Committee of Arrangements. They were decorated with badges bearing the national colors. The meeting was called to order by Mr. LEGRAND, President of the French Central Club, who called Gen. BARTLETT, United States Minister to Sweden, to the chair.

The chairman, briefly addressed the assemblage, remarking that he expected a display of earnest sympathy with the blood-baptized Republic, and it might be thus in this tremendous war against the young Republic some of us might lift our arms in its defense.

Mr. HENRY JACKMAN was appointed

SPANISH AFFAIRS.

Desperate Condition of the Spanish Finances—Preparations for the Reception of the New King—A General Rising Threatened—The Ministerial Organ in New-York—American Claims Against Cuba.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MADRID, Thursday, Dec. 8, 1870.

The Gazette of Dec. 3 publishes the nomination of M. MORET as Minister of Finance in place of M. FIGUEROLA, whose resignation is accepted. This decision proves that the financial plan of M. FIGUEROLA has not met with the approbation of the Cabinet, and that that of his successor is deemed more practicable. This news has produced considerable excitement on the Bourse and among the holders of Spanish securities. Upon these latter there has been a consequent fall of 70 centimes. I shall give you the cause of it; it is a serious one from whatever point of view you may regard it.

M. MORET'S FINANCIAL PLAN.

The financial plan of M. MORET consists of the emission of a fresh loan of 600,000,000 of reals, and if he fails in his efforts to effect that, of proposing a law to the Cortes, on its assembling at the end of the month, giving him authority either to adjourn for a certain period the payment of the rentes due by the State, or the reduction of these rentes, and of the salaries of all employes of the Government, thirty-three per cent. The inevitable and logical result of this would be, supposing the law to pass, to reduce the value of the three per cents. to two per cent., and from the moment of its passing, the consolidated three per cents., which at present are at twenty-six, would immediately fall to 17.30 per cent., making a probable reduction of 9.70 per cent. Certain well-informed persons affirm that the Cortes, seeing the budget of 1869 exhibit a deficiency of nearly 1,300,000,000 of reals, and that of 1870 another, amounting to between six and seven hundred millions, have arrived at the conclusion that Spain can no longer pursue a regular course in her finances, and that she must, volens volens, resort to a suspension of payment or the reduction of the debt by at least thirty-three per cent., for she has got to pay annually 1,400,000,000 to provide for the interest of her acknowledged debts by the aid of an annual budget of 1,000,000,000. She owes twenty-eight milliards of reals, and she possesses two milliards, including the woods of the State which are valued at four hundred millions. M. MORET keeps the Ministry of the colonies until the nomination of his successor, who has not been appointed as yet. It is a matter of notoriety that M. MORET has been long anxious to quit the Colonial Department. You are, no doubt, aware that the Cortes has passed a law, which, without proclaiming the complete emancipation of the negro in the Antilles, may be regarded as an approach to a measure demanded by the humane sentiment of both America and Europe. Notwithstanding the orders issued by the Minister of the Colonies, enjoining the Governor-General of Cuba to execute the provisions of the law in the largest sense, the rich proprietors of slaves in Cuba have managed either to elude or nullify its provisions in regard to the majority of the slaves who were to have been liberated under its provisions. Will the clamors raised by the creditors of the State and the holders of the securities prevent the Cortes approving of M. MORET'S financial plan? This is a question to which no satisfactory reply can be given as yet. It is greatly to be feared that in this grave question, as in all those which have occupied the attention of that body, the influence of Gen. PRIM will obtain the approval of a law which, it cannot be contested, will inflict deep injury on the national credit. I do not desire to exercise a discouraging influence over the foreign holders of Spanish securities, but as a faithful and well-informed chronicler of events, I must not conceal from them the fact, that the present financial crisis is of the most serious character, and that no one, not even the new Minister of Finance himself, can tell what will result from it. The Ministerial journals have announced that a rich German banker who opens his purse freely to all distressed Governments, has consented to advance 500,000,000 reals, or about £5,000,000 sterling. I know from the representative of this house in Madrid that this statement is entirely unfounded, and that it will not advance a single real. Such, at least, is the reply which I had from him on the subject last evening. I shall take care to keep you au courant of this all vital question, the solution of which will exercise a more important influence on the results of the revolution than most people think.

THE NEW MONARCH.

Of the twenty-four Deputies whom Señor TORELLA took with him to Florence, he has left twelve there to accompany the future King to Spain. The other twelve have returned with him. It is believed here that the royal intruder (for he is certainly not the elect of the nation) will not come to Madrid before the 15th of January, by which time the Cortes will have voted the Civil List and the expenses of the coronation. The Ministry had the municipality of Carthagena sounded in regard to the reception they might be disposed to offer his youthful Majesty. It was desired by the Government that grand fêtes should be offered him in that city on his arrival. The Municipality replied that it would not vote a real for fêtes at which it could not conscientiously assist. All its sympathies are for the Republic. It is believed that the Government will not dare to disembark the young monarch at Barcelona, Valencia, Cadiz, Malaga, or Seville, where the Republicans are in the ascendant. It is, therefore, probable, that he will come here by land, and that he will travel by night in order to avoid hostile demonstrations. The Duc D'AOSTA is not as yet King of Spain, for he has not taken the oath to the Constitution. When he finds the Spanish people generally testifying their aversion to him by armed risings, he will, no doubt, repent his having accepted the offer of the Crown by a purchased majority of the Cortes.

THE MINISTERIAL ORGAN IN NEW-YORK.

A Spanish journal, published in New-York, received a short time since a telegraphic dispatch, in which there are as many misstatements as words. This will not surprise you when you learn that the journal in question receives its correspondence and dispatches direct from the Ministry of the Interior here, with strict orders to publish them. Contrary to the allegations of the dispatches thus published, I maintain:

First—That the Deputies did not utter a single cheer in favor of the new monarch on the evening of the 17th November.

Second—That it is contrary to the truth to assert that on the same evening, (17th,) Señor ZORRILLA appeared in the balcony of the Legislative Palace, and that the people applauded him enthusiastically when he announced the result of the vote.

Third—That it is equally inexact to assert that the Ministers were applauded on their leaving the Legislative Palace.

The correspondent of the Cronista, of New-York, dreamed all that he has written; if he did not dream it, he did worse—he invented it. I was present, and can speak from ocular observation. Gen. PRIM left by the door at the opposite side of the Palace to that by which all the Deputies took their departure. He was quite alone, and he drove to his residence in a fiacre to escape observation. His colleagues of the Administration adopted the same precaution.

AMERICAN CLAIMS AGAINST CUBA.

The Ministry is greatly troubled by the telegraphic dispatch received from Washington, announcing that if the Spanish Government refuses to appoint a mixed Commission charged to decide on the justice of the claims preferred by the Americans who have been victimized by the authorities of Cuba, the President of the United States will ask Congress to come to a prompt decision upon the subject. The Ministerial journals have received orders to plead "extenuating circumstances." They are instructed to try and prove that the majority of the Americans who complain of vexatious proceedings against them or of the sequestration of their property, have no claim to be indemnified, seeing that they were either insurgents or accomplices of the insurrection. They add that the Government of Washington cannot seek to protect the latter without abandoning the line of strict neutrality which it promised to observe. All this is only part and parcel of the same system of chicanery and postponement which forms a cardinal element of Spanish policy. The Spanish Government here and the authorities of Cuba have always their hands open to take, but when it becomes a question of returning what has been improperly seized they give in place of money reasons which will not bear examination.

THE BAKER CASE.

It is more than three years since the Spanish Government took possession of the estate of the children of Mrs. HAKES, a widow lady of Louisiana, and notwithstanding the judgment of the Superior Tribunal of War and Marine, which condemned the Government to restore the millions of which it obtained possession by unjustly seizing and selling the property of the husband of Mrs. HAKES, the latter persists in retaining the property of the heirs. Nothing can be more scandalous. Twelve American citizens of New-Orleans are interested in this important suit, in which right and justice are entirely set at defiance by the Spanish Government.

INTRIGUES AGAINST SERRANO.

M. OLOZAGA is seeking every opportunity in his power to make his peace with Gen. PRIM and M. SAGASTA. He was charged by PRIM to propose to the Regent the Vice-royalty of Cuba, with an annual salary of one hundred thousand dollars, but the Regent, getting wind of the intrigue to send him to a distance, replied that he was too old to take the risk of a long sea voyage, and that, moreover, he had it still in his power to render great services to Spain. PRIM was greatly put out by this refusal, and the vexation occasioned by it has been increased by a dispatch in which Gen. CABALLERO DE RODAS, his great political enemy, announces to him that he handed over the supreme command of the Island of Cuba, on the 3d inst., to Gen. VALMASEDA, and that he would embark immediately for the Peninsula.

OUTSIDE PARIS.

Keeping Secret—Gen. de Palikao on the Bombardment.

The London Times correspondent at Berlin says it is asserted on what he has reason to believe good authority, that from the outset the Royal Head-quarters were not agreed on the subject of the bombardment of Paris. "Gen. Count MOLTKE, as well as Gen. VON BLUMENTHAL, the chief of the Crown Prince's Staff, and Col. BIZEY, the commander of the siege artillery, from the very first looked with diffidence upon the arduous undertaking of reducing such a fortress by powder and shot. They certainly thought the thing practicable, but long and difficult, and, knowing Paris to be but scantily provided, preferred the safer and less sanguinary method of starving it out. Their arguments were opposed by Count BISMARCK and Gen. von ROON, the Minister of War, urging the propriety of an attack, were it only to hasten the effect of hunger, produce a strong impression upon the inhabitants, and dispel the dreams of inviolability fostered by the strodes of a VICTOR HUGO and his friends. According as the one or the other opinion prevailed the language of official organs varied, until at last it ceased altogether. The last decision was a sort of compromise between the two opposing opinions, but it is of course impossible to say one can tell whether certain lives not caused it to be again suspended." The London Daily Telegraph publishes the following from Brussels, dated Dec. 11: "A trusty messenger has just come from Versailles, and has brought intelligence of the latest aspect of affairs at head-quarters. Count DE CHAUDORDY was the officer who carried the dispatch to Gen. TROCHU on the 6th inst., with a flag of truce. The dispatch did not contain a formal summons to surrender, but put the whole case, as affecting the military operations in the field, very strongly. The Bavarian and Saxon troops are furnished with ladders, shields, and everything necessary to receive 300 siege pieces. One night was calculated as sufficient time to transport these heavy guns from the parks at Villa Coublay and Sevran to their respective positions, to mount them, and to unmask the batteries. Within a week, if not interfered on the 8th, a concentrated fire was to be opened from eighty batteries on the forts and on Paris itself. The prospect is looked upon as very serious. The King himself comes regretfully to this conclusion, but, it is said, he is forced to consider his soldiers, who begin to complain that the Parisians are being spared at their expense, and urge a speedy end to an unbearable period of suspense. His Majesty also feels that it is a greater cruelty to starve a couple of hundred thousand non-combatants than to kill a certain number by shelling the city. He is, again, much irritated by the folly of the Parisians in holding out when their last hope of relief from the forces in the field is destroyed—the more so as Gen. TROCHU himself declared publicly some time ago that "Paris could not protract her resistance unless the provinces came to her aid." In the next place he is constantly being urged to take extreme measures by those upon whose judgment he places the greatest reliance. Despite these facts, His Majesty has held out until now, but he is believed to be yielding. His sister's death deeply affected him. The Crown Prince, who broke the news, has taken precautions that the telegram announcing the royal lady's decease, which has been expected for several days, should not reach the King by any other hands than his own. The interview between the King and Crown Prince took place on the morning of the 7th, at 8 o'clock. No one was present beside the father and son."

Seeking Food on the Battle-Field—The Need of Fuel.

The Times correspondent at Versailles, in a letter of the 7th, says: "A calm after the storm. The snow falling softly. Not a sound in the broad avenues of the City of Versailles. The wagons and carts of many convoys passing along the paved streets make no noise on the stones. The forts are silent. Like some wild beast enraged, poor Paris has her fits of fury and of dejected, moody silence—perchance repose which cannot bring her comfort or strength—the sleep of a wounded man who is tortured in his dreams. There were last night some outbursts from the forts, but in my morning walk toward Ville d'Avray I heard only the pop-popping of the outposts across the Seine, which put me in mind very much of what must be going on now by many a roverside these frosty mornings across the Channel. And this cold will bring misery unutterable on the Parisians, among whom there was no great store of wood, as they had not had in their Winter provision of fuel. If complaints were heard a month ago, what will they be now? The plagues which desolate armies and are nursed by famine have ever scope in beleaguered cities. Small-pox, typhus, and typhoid fever, fearful scatherhood to be dwellers within your walls—and an enemy relentless at your gates. For me, I confess, the sight of Paris now is heart-breaking. Will no one force her will and make her pale lips breathe forth the word which she dare not, 'Peace.' A little incident which I heard yesterday much affected me. When the French field batteries advanced in front of Creteil—and I see an erroneous opinion has been expressed in England that the columns did not advance beyond the cover of the guns of the forts, whereas some of the places named in positions occupied by the French are out of sight—they were exposed to galling returns from guns inside the Prussian field works, under cover. The French gunners suffered all sides. The French split their own gunners, and from time to time, when a horse went down, a group of men would gather round him, regardless of shell and bullet, and then disperse to return to their pieces. No one could make out what they did—but the officers said they had inside the Prussian villages saw this happen over and over again. When they pushed out their skirmishers to feel the way toward the cheese on the retreat of the French under the walls, the mystery was cleared up. The skeletons only of the horses were left; the heads even in some cases were gone. The carcasses were disembowelled, and all the flesh carried away. They could not afford to lose an ounce of that precious food, and some, no doubt, were killed in obtaining it. This cold weather completes the work of ruin. If any 'happy home' had a door left or a table or chair in the wrecked village, it has gone now in the flames of some wretch's wife and cause kitchens. An unmilitary told me that nothing burned so well as 'piano-wood,' and that he had no idea of its value, having never had an opportunity of testing the property before. I hear the army before Orleans suffered greatly from cold in spite of the warmth afforded by Winter clothing and fuel. Poor souls, and what must it have been for the wounded out in the fields! Death after torture! The condition France will be in next year promises to be, if possible, worse than her present state. Here we are acting all the cruelties we have to be so cruel in 1871, and everyone is as busy killing and eating, and eating and killing that there is no thought for the morrow. Seeking pigs, lambs, sheep, calves, chickens, ducklings, geese, all die almost as soon as they show signs of life. I am just going to make a small excursion, as the snow has ceased to fall, and the weather has become milder. You will see all your space for the letters of your other correspondents more fortunately placed than I am."

Bartholdi—A Strange Story.

The Times' correspondent at Versailles says the following story is in circulation there: "A Prussian officer and a party of men came to the residence of the Marchioness of B——, an old lady, who had not fled like her neighbors. He seemed to know the name, for he inquired of the villagers where the house was, and if the lady was still living in it. He entered with his men, stormed and swore in the hall till he saw the mistress. He ordered dinner for his party, spat on the carpet, took up a chair and dashed it against the wall, threw a vase down from its stand, broke a clock over the chimney-piece, and behaved, in fact, abominably. The old lady was terrified to death. Dinner was served. The officer complained of the wine, and told his men to throw the bottles through the windows till they got better drink. He dined apart, and treated the servants with the utmost insolence. At last, when the orgie was over, he asked to see the lady of the house. He was told she was in bed, ill and frightened. 'Where? Oh, in this room? But I am going to sleep here.' The lady had to get up and turn out, and the officer when he broke some chairs, got into bed in his clothes, and after a time rang the bell violently. A servant appeared. The officer pursued the domestic and insisted on going to the lady. Surrounded by her maids and pale and fainting, the old lady received him at the door of her room. He took off his helmet, bowed with the utmost courtesy, and said, 'Madame, I have accomplished a promise and fulfilled a vow. Your husband was friend to the Margrave of—? 'Yes.' 'He was in the First Regiment of Hussars as a captain when the French invaded Prussia?' 'I know he served in that regiment.' 'Well, then, Madame, I have to tell you that he came to the house of my grandmother, whose father had fallen at Jena. Your husband behaved badly here; but I know how Capt. DE B—— treated our house. I heard the story as a boy, and I treasured it in my soul. I know the disgrace and ruin he brought upon my name, and I spare you the recital of it. But I made a vow when I seemed the idle whim of a boy, and vow it now in the hour of my triumph. Madame, I do not pass a night under your roof. My men will protect you,' and so stalked away. Well, suppose it be true. Will there be no sad memories for the French children whom I see going to school, staring at the great Prussians trudging through the snow?"

INSIDE PARIS.

Intense Hostility Toward Gambetta—The Food Supply.

Writing from Paris on Dec. 8, the London Daily News' correspondent says: "Some German officers who are prisoners on parole, have been insulted in a restaurant, and for their own safety it has been found necessary to confine them in La Roquette. I am not surprised at this. French officers, are, of course, incapable of this contemptible conduct, and it must be owned that the majority of the Parisians have not, under the trying circumstances in which they find themselves, lost that courtesy which is one of the peculiar attributes of the nation. But there is a scum, who lived from hand to mouth during the Empire, and who infest the restaurants and the public places. Some of them wear the uniform of the National Guard; others have attached themselves to the Franctireurs, and all take very good care not to risk their precious lives. I was peacefully dining last night in a restaurant; a friend with whom I had been talking English had left me, and I found myself alone with four of these worthies, who were dining at a table near me. For ten minutes they had informed each other that all strangers here were outlaws from their own country, and that the Americans and Italians who have established ambulances were in all probability Prussian spies. As it took no notice of these statements they proceeded to address me and said, 'You may look at me, Sir, but I assert before you that Dr. EVANS, the ex-dentist of the Emperor, was a spy.' I quietly remarked that, not having the honor to know Dr. EVANS, and being myself an Englishman, while the doctor is an American, I was not responsible for him. 'You are a Greek,' observed another. 'I heard you talk Greek just now.' I mildly suggested that his knowledge of foreign tongues was, perhaps, somewhat limited. 'Well, if you are not a Greek, he said, 'I saw you the other morning near the ambulances of the Prussians to which I belong, and you must be a spy.' 'If you are an Englishman,' cried his friend, 'why do you not go back to your own country, and fight Russia?' I replied that the idea was an excellent one, but that it might, perhaps, be difficult to procure a passport at the moment. The English Ambassador is a friend of mine, and he will give you a pass at my request,' answered the gentleman who had mistaken English for Greek. I thanked him and assured him that I should esteem it a favor if he would obtain from his friend a pass for this purpose for me. He said he would do so, as it would be well to rid Paris of such vermin as myself and my countrymen. He has not yet, however, fulfilled his promise. Scenes such as these are of frequent occurrence at restaurants; bully and coward are generally synonymous terms; and while, as I have already said, nothing can be more courteous than the conduct of French officers, French gentlemen, and, unless they are excited, the French populace, nothing can be more insolent than that of the third-class dandies who reserve their valor for the interior of the towns, or who, if ever they venture outside of its fortifications, take care to skulk beneath the protection of the guns of Genoa."

THE FOOD SUPPLY.

The same correspondent reports: "Food is becoming scarce every day. Yesterday all our sausages were requisitioned. We have still not the cows to fall back on, but they are kept to the last for the sake of their milk. They are fed on oats, as hay is scarce. So you see the mother of a calf has many advantages over its sons. All the animals in the Zoological Gardens have been killed except the monkeys; these are kept alive from a vague and Darwinian notion that they are our relatives. In the cellar of the English Embassy there are three sheep. Never did the sick man just alive after the poor man's eye lamb. Never! Never did the sick man just alive after the poor man's eye lamb. Never! The last after these sheep. We go and look at them frequently, much as a London Arab goes to have a smell at a cook-shop. Some one has discovered that an excellent jelly can be made out of old bones, and we are called upon by the Mayors to give up all our bones in order that they may be submitted to the process. Mr. FOWELL, jr., I believe, a contractor in London. I do not know him, but yesterday I dined with a friend who produced from a tin some Australian mutton, which he had bought of Mr. FOWELL before the commencement of the siege. Better I never tasted, and out of gratitude I give the worthy FOWELL the benefit of a gratis advertisement. If we only had a stock of this meat here we could defy the Prussians. As it is, I am very much afraid that in a very few weeks WILLIAM will date his telegrams to ANGOULÊME from the Tuileries.

PRUSSIA AND ROME.

German Intervention Sought in Behalf of the Holy See—The Apostolic Nuncio—Care for Germany.

Writing from Rome on Dec. 4, the correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette says: "Last week Father KOZMIAN, secretary of Mgr. LEDOCHOWSKI, Archbishop of Posen, arrived here from Versailles, and proceeded immediately to the Vatican to visit Cardinal ANTONELLI. The next day Father KOZMIAN was received by the Pope, to whom he presented a letter from the King of Prussia. The Archbishop of Posen was sent to Versailles by the Holy Father to ask the King's intervention in favor of the Holy See; and, whatever you may see stated in other journals, I am in a position to inform you that his mission was successful. The King tells the Holy Father that he can take no active steps during the continuance of the war with France, but that he will make the cause of the Holy See his first thought on his return to his official seat. He even says that he will act on this point with France, which is thought to imply that he has come to an understanding either with NAPOLEON III. or HENRY V. I hear a whisper, however, of his promises being accompanied by a proposal which gives them a Bismarckian air, requiring the Holy Father, after the fall of Paris, to urge the French not to continue armed opposition. Gen. VEJRONI is sitting a strong Tobist in France, and the Holy Father will not allow himself to be drawn into a measure which the French nation would never forgive. But there is no doubt that the King of Prussia has need of the Pope's countenance in other projects, one of which is his assumption of the Imperial crown at Count BISMARCK will find it hard to attain this end without the full satisfaction of Cardinal ANTONELLI. The Vatican, indeed, declares that this is already given, and, so far as Prussian assurances go, there is certainly some prospect of a restoration, in some limited form, of the temporal power. The Archbishop of Posen has also arranged for Versailles the affair of the episcopal episcopate in Germany. The nuncature to Bavaria is to be suppressed, and one will be established at Berlin for the whole of the new Empire. I am informed that, in return for his successful negotiations, the Archbishop of Posen has been created a Cardinal in petto, and will himself be nominated to the Berlin nuncature, with the title of Cardinal-Legate to Germany. His elevation to the Sacred College will be announced in the next Consistory."

THE NEW EMPIRE.

Text of the Address of the Reichstag to the Future Emperor of Germany.

The following is the text of the address to be presented by a deputation of the North German Parliament to King WILLIAM, at Versailles. It was adopted by 194 yeas against 6 nays. (Social Democrats:)

MOST ILLUSTRIOUS AND MOST MIGHTY KING! MOST GRACIOUS KING AND MASTER!—At the call of your Majesty, the people has rallied around its leader, and heroically defends on foreign soil the fatherland which had been wantonly challenged. The war demands immeasurable sacrifices, but the deep grief at the loss of her brave sons does not shake the determined resolution of the nation, who will not lay aside her arms till beaten in assured by peace and better-protected frontiers against the recurring attacks of her jealous neighbor. Thanks to the victories to which your Majesty has led the armies of Germany in faithful companionship of arms, the nation looks forward to an enduring unity. The North German Parliament, in union with the Princes of Germany, approaches with the prayer that your Majesty will deign to consecrate the work of unification by accepting the Imperial crown of Germany. The Teutonic crown on the head of your Majesty will transmute, for the re-established Empire of the German nation, an era of power, of peace, of well-being, and of liberty, secured under the protection of the laws. The fatherland thanks its leader and the glorious army, at the head of which your Majesty will dwell on or extend the wide shield. The devotion and the deeds of its sons will be remembered forever. May it soon be vouchsafed that the Emperor, crowned with glory, shall restore peace to the nation. United Germany has proved itself mighty and victorious in war, under the leadership of its supreme commander. The united German Empire will be mighty and peace-loving under its Emperor.

Your royal Majesty's most humble and most faithfully obedient,

THE REICHSTAG OF THE NORTH GERMAN BUND.

The Criticisms of the Government Policy—Count Beust's Troubles.

According to the New Free Presse, Count BEUST replied to the Hungarian deputation to M. DE PULSZKY, who had violently attacked him, and even said that the "perpetual smile" of the Chancellor did not please him: "You see, indeed, my smiling face, but you seem to have no idea of the sleepless nights which I pass—of the tormenting doubts and the restless cares which consume me. Of what use would it be to put deep folds on my forehead? but do not believe that I smile inwardly when I think of our situation. What you call monotonous in my policy is simply the result of my endeavors not to let Austria be carried into the whirlpool of events. Look at our internal circumstances and you will recognize that there is at present no great active policy possible for Austria. Had I placed myself at the side of Prussia I should have been condemned by the Hungarians, Czechs, and Poles. Had I taken the part of France, the German-Austrians would have condemned me. In questions such as those now pending in Europe, which lie beyond the sphere of Austria, I must carefully observe an evasive policy, guarding only the general interests of our Empire, because taking any part would meet with opposition. Therefore we are called to an eminently peaceful policy, and therefore a great wrong is done to Austria when she is suspected of pursuing disturbing, anti-peaceable plans. No one in Europe can wish for peace more sincerely in his own interest than Austria, and to this want I seek to render justice."

RUSSIA.

Warlike Preparations Progressing—Definite Expression of Russian Public Opinion.

The Pall Mall Gazette, of Dec. 15, prints the following article: "A correspondent of the Manchester Examiner, writing from Moscow, on Dec. 9, says: The present tone of the Russian Press and the ominous tidings which continue to pour in from all quarters are strangely at variance. Stores of arms and ammunition are being collected on every side. The Poltava-Kharkov Railway—which will unquestionably play an important part in the event of any active movement against Turkey—is being pushed forward with all possible speed, and now lacks only fifty miles of completion. The Minister of War, acting upon the personal instructions of the Emperor, has just issued directions respecting the arrangements of the medical and commissariat departments, which clearly have the aim of preparing for an imminent contingency. A report is current here (though it still lacks official confirmation) that a number of small gunboats are already assembled in the Black Sea. Yet, in the teeth of all these threatening symptoms, the leading Journals still continue to profess peace, and the Russian Government announced, through its two principal organs, (the Inoslitsie Russe and the Gouvernement Gazette,) that the Emperor has no intention of reviving the Eastern question; that he wishes to preserve to the utmost the integrity of Turkey and the peace of Europe, and that his sole aim is the deliverance of Russia from an oppressive and unnatural restriction. These assurances are no doubt sincere to a certain extent, it being manifestly better for Russia to attain her end, if possible, without fighting; but the symptoms above mentioned seem to indicate that persuasion will, if necessary, be backed by forcy. There is, moreover, an additional temptation to Russia to assume a threatening attitude, namely, her conviction of the backwardness of her adversaries in general, and of England in particular. The easy and contemptuous frankness with which this latter theory has just been set forth by the Moscow News—perhaps the most trustworthy exponent of Russian public opinion—deserves quotation at length:

"It may be observed from the extracts which we have quoted, that the opinions of the English public as regards the 'Black Sea question' are anything but unanimous. 'Many minds, says the proverb, 'many minds.' On the one hand we have rumors of stringent measures propounded by English statesmen, and of vast preparations going forward in English ports; on the other hand we ourselves that every bellicose article in an English journal terminates with a kind of hymn to peace, and a fervent hope that war and bloodshed may yet be averted. Even in the Times, that great mouth-piece of public feeling in England, the voices of such eminent men as Mr. FROUDE and Mr. JOHN STUART MILL have been raised in favor of peace—a very significant fact at the present conjuncture. In fact, the policy of England is nowadays as uninteresting as it was formerly the reverse. It may be that the Napoleonic wars have taught her a lesson; it may be that she is tired of constant interference in the affairs of the Continent, and wishes for a change. However this may be, it is certain that the leading doctrine of English statesmanship at present appears to be, that Great Britain being physically isolated from the rest of Europe, should be politically so likewise; and that her motto, as regards Continental politics, should be 'Laissez faire.' England, in short, is a commercial country; a country, in other words, whose whole duty is to make money, and let her neighbors take care of themselves. She has begun to learn what she might have learned long ago, that the long and sanguinary wars which she has waged, during the last century and a half, for the preservation of the balance of power in Europe have merely wasted her own blood and treasure without either effectually disabling her enemies or earning a little of gratitude from her friends. The Crimean War, into which she suffered herself to be drawn blindfold by the intrigues of the French Emperor and his clique, was her crowning lesson; and since that time she has confined her interference in any great European imbroglio (as, for instance, the Polish insurrection of 1863, or the Danish War of 1864) to a little diplomatic thunder, without any attempt at practical intervention.

"The last sentence of this curious summary supplies the real key to the present confident attitude of Britain. 'England will not fight; she will only protest and diplomatize a little, consequently we can do as we like.' On such theories our conduct is superfluous."

EX-ROYALTY.

Misadventure of Isabella of Spain in Switzerland.

The Indépendance Belge says that the Ex-Queen of Spain lately attended a great religious celebration at Carouge, near Geneva, and was very badly received by the crowd. Remarks were addressed to her on various subjects, but especially on her supposed culpability with regard to the present war, which has so seriously injured the trade and industry of neutral countries, particularly the canton of Geneva. The Ex-Queen was long in succeed of having made numerous gaffes with the Empress of Austria, who has seemed to be replaced on the throne of Spain. Altogether the crowd seems to have expatiated at great length, and with considerable acumen, on various portions of the Queen's career, which it was, no doubt, qualified to do, as in Switzerland the very apple-women read the newspapers.

MR. SEWARD.

The Party in China—Threatening Demonstration of Chinese Mobs.

A letter in the Philadelphia Inquirer, dated Tientsin, Nov. 4, supplies the following intelligence concerning Mr. SEWARD'S movements: "The arrival of Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, accompanied by Admiral ROGERS and staff, with about sixty marines and a band of music, at this place, created more excitement than any event since the horrible massacre of Christians on the 21st of June last, and for a long time previous. The officials were disinclined to give them a passport to Pekin on first application, but finding they were determined to proceed without one, not only consented to grant it, but dispatched two mandarins of high rank to accompany and protect them from danger and incurrence. They left in small boats and proceeded up the Peiho River and Canal, and expect to return overland in about two weeks. At least 20,000 Chinese collected to witness their departure, and fierce and bitter were their imprecations against the Western barbarians, and showing of other demonstrations of their displeasure at the presence of the party and the display made. The protestations of friendship contained in a letter from Prince KUNG are looked upon here as more meaningless words."

SURRATT was informed of this by friends who were in communication with him, and, instead of at once complying, thereby securing the release of his mother, he immediately absconded, leaving her to her fate. Probably most readers will wish to have more definite information as to this "best authority" before implicitly believing the story.

THE PERILS OF THE SEA.

Marine Losses for 1870—Property Worth Seventeen and Half Millions of Dollars Destroyed.

The marine losses of the United States during the year now passing away have reached the heavy figures of over $17,500,000, inclusive of the values of the several cargoes of the vessels lost or missing. The last quarter of the year is always the hardest upon shipping, and the month of October was the most disastrous of the three so far reported. It has to answer for sixty-six vessels lost or missing. Of the lost ones, forty-two were burned or sunk—an extraordinary number to be thus destroyed—and a fact which almost forces upon the mind a suspicion of very great carelessness among those who go down to the sea in ships. Of the remainder, collisions as much as is reported for the month of December, six were wrecked, fifteen were abandoned, twenty-five from one cause or another were sunk, twenty-seven foundered, and forty-five were missing, some of which, however, arrived at port safely during some part of the year. It is peculiarly a monthly list of the marine casualty:

JANUARY.—Wrecked, 11; burned, 3; abandoned, 2; sunk and foundered, 14; missing, 3; total, 32. Of these, two were steamers—the Pelerge, from Galveston, Texas, for New-York, burned at sea, and the Shenandoah, from Philadelphia for New-York, missing. There were besides 4 ships, 7 barks, 3 brigs and 16 schooners—total, 30. The value of these vessels, exclusive of cargoes, was $1,703,000.

FEBRUARY.—Wrecked, 11; burned at sea, 3; abandoned, 3; sunk and foundered, 7; missing, 3; total, 27. Of these, 2 were steamers, 1 ship, 3 barks, 2 brigs and 19 schooners. The steamer Sun Flower was sunk by collision in South-west Pass, near New-Orleans; the steamer Tuo Rogs, from Dublin, Ga., for Savannah, was abandoned; the steamer Brunette, from New-York for Philadelphia, was sunk by collision; the Leander was wrecked on Aransas Bay, Texas, and the steamship New Jersey, from Baltimore for Norfolk, Va., was burned. The aggregate value of these vessels, exclusive of cargoes, was $2,075,000.

MARCH.—Wrecked, 24; abandoned, 5; foundered, 3; abandoned after collision, 1; burnt, 1; missing, 4; total, 42. Three were steamers: The Golden City, from San Francisco, to Panama, wrecked; the Eagle, from New-York, to Havana, wrecked, and the bark of Rodolfo, from New-York, for Liverpool, missing, with all on board. There were also 3 ships, 9 barks, 3 brigs, 18 schooners and 1 sloop. Their aggregate value, exclusive of cargo, was $2,128,000.

APRIL.—Wrecked, 24; abandoned, 3; burnt, 5; foundered, 1; missing, 5; total, 37. Of these, 3 were ships, 7 barks, 6 brigs, 17 schooners and 1 sloop, of the aggregate value of $2,573,000. There were no American steam-ships lost during this month.

MAY.—Wrecked, 10; burned, 4; foundered and capsized, 4; missing, 4; total, 22. Of these, 1 was the steamer Louisiana, burned at Cedar Keys, Fla.; 4 ships, 3 barks, 4 brigs, and 10 schooners, all together valued at $630,000, without cargoes. This month has the mildest record of the whole year.

JUNE.—Wrecked, 15; abandoned, 3; foundered, sunk and capsized, 4; missing, 4; total, 25. There were 2 ships, 4 barks, 4 brigs, and 15 schooners, all of the aggregate value of $708,000, without cargoes. These are no steamers reported lost this month.

JULY.—Wrecked, 14; foundered, capsized and sunk, 4; burned, 1; missing, 1; total, 20. Two were steamers—the Rescue, from Charleston, S. C., for New-York, burned, and the Chalice, from Liverpool, for New-Orleans, wrecked; 1 ship, 3 barks, 5 brigs, and 9 schooners, in the aggregate value of $[illegible], exclusive of cargo, were also lost.

HANG THE LEGISLATURE!

No One But the Law-Makers to Blame for the Fallen Factory Murder.

Conclusion of the Inquest—Evidence of the Building Department Attacher—A Verdict Exonerating the Owner Rendered.

Coroner KEENAN and his jury proceeded yesterday with their investigation in the case of HAIN'S factory, the fall of which on the 16th inst. caused the death of four persons. The evidence presented yesterday was that of the Superintendent of Buildings and his attaches.

BERNARD M. SWEENEY, of No. 321 West Twenty-ninth-street, testified: In December of last year the firm of Hain & Co. employed me to work for them and a half years; before that I was with Thomas Fitzpatrick, in Ninth-street, near Avenue A, for three years; before that I was in the Fourteenth District; head of the building department; I was in charge of the place; heard that a wall had fallen before that of such a size, to be erected by Mr. Hain; went at it at the request of my employer about 10th or 11th of October; and had finished; [illegible] visited the place; were clearing away the rubbish and wheeling it out; [illegible] days after; they commenced the stone work; often then I was there at least; sometimes every day; they were always on; [illegible] the work; the stone was in rubble; the lime was slaked; the timbers were 12 by 12; the roof timbers, which were 3 by 10; the roof was flat; the timbers were 12 feet apart; the roof timbers were laid; the building was in charge of Zeltner; there was a chance of the wind; the roof over any building in course of erection; [illegible] the roof; [illegible] in the district; there were three or four; [illegible] exposed at this; the cause of the fall was the force of the wind upon the roof and [illegible] it; shifting it towards the east and carrying the wall over; it is a much [illegible] which caused the wall to go; notwithstanding the building was erected too hurriedly; if the windows had been closed it might have prevented the fall; or if the floors had been laid [illegible] would not have occurred; I don't think that cross walls would have prevented it; if the cross walls had been thicker; any further support; it might have prevented the fall; I saw Mr. HAIN after the accident; he proposed to put two stories no wanted to place beams in the wall for the purpose of a platform; did not give permission, but referred him to the Department; [illegible] platform, because it was thought that people passing through the walls would accustom them; [illegible] nothing to witness for his trouble in [illegible] the matter before the Department; the beams were run through the walls, and [illegible] they strengthened, and not weakened them.

WILLIAM T. FITZPATRICK: I am a Sanitary Inspector in the Building Department; his business is that of carpenter and joiner; was examined by the Board of American Architects; visited the building that fell and examined the thickness of the walls, their plumbness, straightness, the material that was used, and found everything in excellent condition; never saw better rough walls in his life; no thought of danger ever struck him with reference to the building.

WALTER W. ADAMS testified: I am Deputy Superintendent of Buildings; and have been in the Department since 1868; I was a master builder before I entered the Department; I was in that business fifteen years in this City; I recognize and remember the specification now shown; it is for a building to be erected in West Twenty-fifth-street; [illegible] of eight stories; the specification was applied for by an architect and builder named TYSON; it was asked for in October last; about that time Mr. TYSON came to the office and asked for a blank form, which the clerk furnished; he also asked what the law required for a building of eight stories, twenty-six feet front, and probably, eighty feet high; I happened to be near and the question attracted my attention; he made no mention of the depth of the building; I spoke to him and gave him a copy of the law and marked the sections for his guidance; I also agreed to give him any other information he might wish; Mr. TYSON, on this information, made out a specification, of which this paper is a copy, for the use of the District Inspector; he submitted its specifications, and I promised to report on them; I made a short examination of the plan then, and found that the piers of his buildings would be six feet wide; the Superintendent being sick and at home, it was my duty to examine and pass upon the papers submitted to the office; [illegible] proposed [illegible] in the course of the [illegible] I examined Mr. TYSON's specification; and finding it in conformity with the several laws on building in New-York, I certified it to that effect; I suppose Mr. TYSON got the paper; we have no power to pass upon any plan, to disapprove or approve, merely to certify that the specification is or is not in conformity with the law; and in the latter case, gives information to the builder, where the discrepancy exists; I heard nothing about the factory until it fell; the District Inspector was furnished with a plan.

COLONEL JUNIOR—Before the fall covered the ground under which the building was erected, the sections. In all buildings other than dwelling-houses, not above 30 feet in height, and not more than 25 in width, the outside walls shall not be less than 8 inches thick; if above 30 feet and under 40 feet in height, the outside walls shall not be less than 12 inches thick; if above 40 feet and under 50 feet in height, the outside walls shall not be less than 16 inches thick; if above 50 feet and under 60 feet in height, the outside walls shall not be less than 16 inches thick to the height of third-story beams, and not less than 12 inches thick from thence to the top, and the inner cross walls shall not be less than 12 inches thick to the height of the second-story beams, and not less than 12 inches from thence to the top; and if above 60 feet and under 80 feet in height, the outside walls shall not be less than 16 inches thick to the height of at least 60 feet, and up to the under side of the second-story beams above, not less than 12 inches thick; the inner cross walls or the party walls not less than 20 inches thick to the height of the third-story beams, and not less than 16 inches from thence to the top. In all buildings over 27 feet in width, and over 40 feet in height, the walls or girders, supported by columns running from front to rear, the walls shall be increased an additional 4 inches in thickness to the same relative thickness in height; in addition to the thickness of every additional 10 feet in width of such building, or any portion thereof; and in all buildings intended or used for storage or warehouse purposes, in storing or keeping any merchandise or other property, there shall be an additional 4 inches thicker than above required.

Under this law buildings 100 feet deep might have been built without any cross walls; I considered the specifications fully adequate for such a building; the thickness of the walls and heavy timbers to be provided made it, in my opinion, a very strong one; the lower made no provision respecting anchors; inspectors have to report daily and monthly the result of their daily observations, and in case of a violation of the law they make a special report; all of these reports go to the Superintendent; I suppose the inspector made his usual report in relation to the fallen building; I have seen the building since the accident; from the appearance of the ruins as I found them soon after the disaster, I am of the opinion that the wind struck the northerly part of the building, raised the roof, threw it partly off, and when it fell it carried the walls under it; I don't think a tie rod would have prevented it. The walls that were left after the fall stood firmly; they were plumb and straight, and in every way well built; there was an extraordinary rate of wind at the time it fell; I think if the floors had been laid they would have prevented the wind from blowing the whole structure together; sometimes double floors are laid; then the first floor is put in before the roof; these are very unusual cases.

JAMES M. MAGERGOR, of No. 42 Irving-place, testified: I am Superintendent of Buildings in this City; I was appointed in 1868, in May, I think, and have held the position ever since; previously I was a house carpenter; the law provides that a builder intending to erect a building must furnish a detailed statement of what he intends to do; that is the meaning of section 81 of the Building law, which reads as follows:

SEC. 81. Before the erection, construction, alteration or repair of any building or part of a building in the City of New-York is commenced, the owner, architect or builder shall notify the Department for the Survey and Inspection of Buildings, and submit a detailed statement in writing of the plans and specifications for such erection, construction, alteration, or repair of such building, or any part thereof, and a record of all statements shall be kept in the Department. All that portion of the City of New-York lying north and west of a line running easterly from the North or Harlem River, to the northerly of the north side of Eighty-third-street, to the east side of Eighth-avenue, and thence running northerly along the westerly side of Eighth-avenue to the Harlem River, is hereby exempted from the provisions of this act.

Before this law plans were submitted to the Department; but the builders objected to making the plans public, and had the law changed; I have had prepared blanks on which they could state the particulars; I then certify that the building is according to the law; I have frequently advised the builder that thicker walls should be used, and they have done as I requested; but I have no power to make them do so; I have had power to make the builders use more or less time in constructing a building; the building that fell was reported to me, but nothing was said about its not being according to the law; the working of my Department is as follows: The City is divided into twenty-six districts, each under the charge of an inspector; they must pass an examination and receive a certificate from the Board of the American Institute of Architects; their duties are to examine all buildings in course of erection, all alterations or repairs to old buildings, and report all violations to me; it is also their duty to report all unsafe buildings, chimneys or other matters that may require attention from the Department; they must report the time of commencement and completion of all buildings under their charge; I found it necessary to appoint sergeant inspectors, who supervise also other inspectors; they make monthly reports; they must follow up any violations reported by the inspectors; I submit to the jury two forms, marked B and C, which show how we work; the fallen building was reported to me, but no violation of law was reported to me on it, nor no particular reference made to me in any way which would lead me to conclude that it was not up on according to law; the number of buildings commenced since Jan. 1 last has been 2,011; [illegible] I have some inspectors on look at fire escapes; they are not required to report; [illegible] in all my annual reports I have called attention to the defects of the law; I examined the building that fell; I find it was constructed according to law; the mortar was quite green.

To the JURY—If four months had been taken to build the walls it would not have prevented the fall of the building; I would not have constructed a building like this one was built; I would have built, instead of the foundation of brick-work, eight inches deep, and twenty-four wide at the base, all the way up to the Fourth-placed twenty or twenty-five feet apart; they would have to be on the inside of the building; the roof was not very heavy—four pounds to the superficial foot, or about 81,000 pounds for the entire roof; I think the roof was raised by the wind, and slid sideways; I don't think thicker walls would have prevented the fall; if the windows had been closed, or the roof fastened, the building would not have fallen; if the floor had been laid and the windows in, I think it would have been secure; I have always advocated stronger buildings; before the Legislature; builders generally make their walls thicker than the law calls for; the owner, answering made the building stronger; I have no power to stop a building or issue an injunction; I have reported violations to the Judge or Attorney-General; I have reported to City Judge or Corporation Counsel; I have reported to Mr. Fullerton; I have reported to Mr. Bell; I have reported to Mr. Wallace; I have reported to Mr. Tweed; Wall Counsel in which such matters proceedings are instituted, upon the receipt of a written report of a referee; I am a deputy of a Justice or Justice for any penalty or penalties, and give [illegible] the removal of such violation or violations and may order [illegible] first instance [illegible] the party [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR.

On the 28th, Mont Avron, near Paris, was silent, but the other forts kept up a steady fire upon the German guns. The Berlin papers say this is the initial movement in the general bombardment, as the capture of Avron will greatly facilitate the reduction of other works. Paris advices by way of Tours say that new works constructed beyond Mont Valerian, on the west, sent shells beyond Versailles, the Prussian headquarters, which is now considered untenable by the latter. Balloon advices to the 27th represent the people determined on a vigorous defense. The cold was intense, and military operations were suspended in a great measure, but preparations for future operations, from which much is expected, were in progress. A Saxon battalion at Maison Blanche had been dislodged.

The French claim the battle of Pont Noyelles as a victory, denying the German report that they had captured French prisoners. The Prussians moving on Havre were concentrating on Wednesday near Bolbec, and an engagement with the defenders of the port was imminent. Communication between Cherbourg and Calais is now effected by water, the land routes being interrupted by the Germans. The Crown Prince and the Duke of Saxony are reported to have gone to the assistance of Gen. MANTEUFFEL, and the French are said to have left Arras, moving toward the extreme northern fortresses of France. The Germans on Monday occupied a position fourteen miles south of Arras.

Advices from Strasbourg say that two attempts to storm Belfort by the Germans were repulsed with considerable loss to the besiegers. The Germans have evacuated Dijon, which is now occupied by a French force. This is the first fruit of M. GAMBETTA's visit to Lyons. The French prisoners in the fortresses near the Rhine were recently detected in a conspiracy to escape on Christmas eve, and the scheme was, of course, defeated.

French reports represent the Prussians as treating the English newspaper correspondents with the armies, with harshness, sending several of them outside the lines.... A protest from the French Government sent to Vienna, against the use of Austrian railroad stock for South German military purposes, has resulted in the appointment of an Austrian commission to investigate the matter.... An English ship with a submarine cable for the French on board has been seized in the Thames at the instigation of the Prussian Ambassador. The Prussian Government has apologized for the outrage upon British vessels in the Seine, and offer pecuniary indemnity if required. The military officer who committed the offense has been Court-martialed and dismissed the service.

Mr. Sumner and San Domingo.

Whether Senator SUMNER adheres to or recedes from the position he has assumed in the San Domingo dispute, is a question to be decided by himself. Whether, if the opportunity recurred, he would—as some of the newspaper correspondents allege—repeat his recent speech, making it more severe, if changed at all, is a matter which must be left to his own taste. If he prefer personalities to principles, and imagines that vehement attacks upon the President constitute proof of statesmanship, he will probably travel further on the course he has chosen. He may rest assured, however, that the approving words of GERRIT SMITH or WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON will not shake the judgment formed by the great body of intelligent observers in reference to the merits of the controversy. That judgment is not favorable to him. His attainments, experience, and general character might have been accepted as guarantees against the adoption in his case of the tactics common to ordinary ward politicians. He of all men might have been supposed to be superior to the methods of carrying on a discussion with which speakers of less pretension have made the country familiar. Where we looked for an example we have found a warning. A Massachusetts Senator, instead of stating calmly and courteously the reasons which impelled him to oppose the policy of the Executive, deemed it not unbecoming his reputation to assail the President, to insult his motives, and coarsely and offensively deride his suggestions. Mr. SUMNER may look back on what he said and did with entire self-complacency, but the public regard him and his speech in quite a different light. They look upon the speech as discreditable to him, and as an illustration of the degrading tendencies which have crept into Congressional debates, and lessened their influence upon outside opinion.

So far as San Domingo is concerned, Mr. SUMNER has done more than any other man to break down the opposition encountered by the treaty. The policy of annexation was a fair subject for difference of opinion. Weighty considerations were available on both sides. On either, a plausible argument might be constructed with strict reference to expediency. The President has certainly stated his view temperately and fairly. If those portions of his late Message which relate to it indicate an ardor not usually displayed by him, there is no reason for supposing that it proceeded from anything but a conviction of the importance of the subject from the stand-point of public interest. Was it not possible to present the opposite view with the same temper and the same respect for a different opinion? Are we to conclude that the opposition to the treaty rests not upon profound conviction, but upon personal pique and animosity? We apprehend that this is the conclusion which Mr. SUMNER's course has forced upon the minds of many. The mere fact that he has exposed himself to suspicion upon this point is fatal to his authority in the final disposition of the main question. It will be said and not without a semblance of plausibility, that he is simply keeping up a fight with the President, irrespective of matters directly connected with the treaty or the policy that is relied upon for its justification. If this impression does injustice to Mr. SUMNER, he can blame only himself. He threw away all the influence he ever had in regard to San Domingo when he converted a grave issue into a pretext for bandying epithets and making war upon the President.

Everybody Whitewashed.

Coroners and juries have a happy method of smoothing over difficulties, explaining away calamities, and making things pleasant for culpable persons. The jury impaneled to hear evidence respecting the fall of HALE's man-trap in Thirty-fifth-street, are not an exception to the rule. They have whitewashed everybody. HALE, the owner, and COCHRANE, the builder, are by the verdict exonerated from all blame, because the building "was put up according to law, and built of the best materials." And the Building Department of the City is relieved from responsibility by the declaration that its officers "have performed their duties in this matter according to law." All the persons concerned are justified, so far as the Coroner's jury can justify them; the censure, which belongs somewhere, being conveniently cast upon an impersonality—the law, which is pronounced "defective," and is commended to the Legislature for such amendment as shall "make special provisions for all isolated buildings."

The worst of whitewash is that it rubs off; it does not permanently hide dirt or deformity. This verdict of the Coroner's jury may satisfy Mr. HALE, Mr. COCHRANE, and the officials of the Building Department, but it will not shake or modify the general conviction that the fall of the building was in part the result of causes which might have been averted, and, therefore, that the calamity entails a responsibility equal to that attaching to an aggravated case of manslaughter.

The defectiveness of the law is apparent. It prescribes rules which are not universally applicable, fails to provide for differences and difficulties that continually occur, and deprives the Superintendent of the discretionary authority which is essential to the effective performance of the duties properly belonging to his office. The amendment suggested by the jury would very imperfectly meet the requirements that are continually felt. "Special provisions for isolated buildings" will not be enough. It is notorious that HALE's building was only one of scores of man-traps that have been hurriedly constructed in various parts of the City. Adjoining buildings may in the meantime beset the danger, but the radical defects are there, and sooner or later what with cruel mockery are called "calamities" will be repeated. The law needs thorough revision and amendment. But let the law be rendered perfect, and while the City Government remains in its present hands, what assurance can we have that the Building Department will be more trustworthy or efficient than any other of the departments? The jury may be satisfied that no blame attaches to the Superintendent or his subordinates in the Thirty-fifth-street matter, but our citizens are not satisfied. The Inspectors are of course prepared to affirm that they did their duty, but others have stated that the Inspectors were rarely seen about the building. Their visits seem to have been mere formalities, and their opinions as to particular sources of weakness in the building and particular methods of imparting greater strength, are too conflicting to be of much value. No man can read the evidence without feeling that the machinery provided by the law and our civic masters is utterly inadequate. The Building Department, in fact, is a delusion and a snare; it leads the public to believe that in the matter of building effective precautions are taken, when in reality the measures employed afford little absolute security.

As for the builder, Mr. COCHRANE, it is plain that he had only one object in view—the fulfillment of his contract and the earning of so much money. He knew that the building was not what it should be, yet he went on with it in the hope that it would admit of being finished. He was conscious that the work was being hurried. The job was to be completed in an incredibly short time, and he took the chances. Other "practical" witnesses do not improve the case. Most of them were evidently intent upon helping the jury to whitewash, but their statements embody sufficient confessions and contradictions to show on what a slender basis the idea of justification rests. For the owner, Mr. HALE, the evidence furnishes no justification whatever. He relied and still relies upon the defectiveness of the law. What the law compelled him to do he did—and that was all. When means of insuring greater safety were suggested, he fell back upon the letter of his bond, and quoted law as his excuse for not making the building what it should have been. He hurried the work without heeding the risk incurred. He nursed a heartless parsimony at the expense of strength; and when the frail fabric tumbled down under the pressure of a wind which to strong buildings brought no harm, he lifted up his hands in wonder, and took the Building Department under the shelter of his favorite law. Slocum would have done precisely the same had he been the owner of the Thirty-fifth-street manufactory. Technically, perhaps, he might have been excused. Morally he would be held, in a large degree, responsible for the catastrophe. And if the law was what it ought to be, the embodiment of justice, the whitewashing verdict of the jury would not be the end of the melancholy business.

The Perils of Pedestrians.

It would appear to be a settled conviction in the minds of many drivers that pedestrians in the streets are interlopers, who ought to be weeded out as fast as possible. It is difficult to find any justification for the onesidedness of the present arrangement. Founded as it is on the thick-skin and long-suffering patience which latterly has become a sort of second nature to New-Yorkers, this assumption on the part of drivers has reached the very perfection of impudent tyranny. What with street cars, omnibuses, carriages, wagons, and trucks, it is as much as one's limbs or life are worth to undertake the horrors of that middle passage which lies between the curbs. To the man who can find food for fun in the terror of his fellow-creatures, there must be vast amusement in watching the quantity of "worm fence" made by those who "go for" the other side of either of our principal streets. For the ladies, there are divers brave members of the Broadway Squad, who act the part of Great Heart, and conduct the trembling pilgrims across in safety; but for men and boys there is no helping hand, and unless they sink their pride of sex, and steal into an humble place on the skirts of the convoy, they must meet the dangers as best they can. In fact, it is a cause for gratitude and thanksgiving if your near approach is not the signal for a new crack of the whip, and a livelier rattling of wheels. We are not sure that these Camillas, as they "scour the plain," do not look back regretfully as they see it left so clean of lifeless carcasses.

Then, too, these men who so impatiently wait in the side streets a chance to precipitate their trucks across the thoroughfares. Who ever knew them to stop anywhere else than on the very crosswalks? And, lest some hurried walker might venture to get through, how habitually they so arrange it that no loophole shall be available. One cannot walk the distance of three consecutive blocks without becoming an involuntary member of a small crowd of pedestrians, detained by this ingeniously-provoking process. Talk of sidewalk committees! Broadway is full of them on every fine day. Holiday week has made this a notable feature of New-York street life, and the victories won in worrying our citizens have been simply innumerable.

The evil may be irremediable, but it cannot be that horses and carriages have exclusive right to the streets. That, within reasonable limits, the roadways are theirs by a sort of preemptive title we will not deny; yet those reasonable limits ought to be regarded. But when it comes to the cross-walk phase of the question, we are against the concession of a single square inch. The crossings are a part of the sidewalk to which only the pedestrian can maintain a title, and neither horse nor vehicle should be allowed to build a fence across them. If the way is not clear for the driver, he should be compelled to wait until it is, and to wait in such a place as to leave the crosswalk free.

Precautions Against Fire.

Tidings of disastrous fires are brought to us by the telegraph from all parts of the country. The number of these misfortunes seems extraordinary, but a little reflection will show how natural it is that at such a time they should occur. There has been a prolonged drouth in almost every direction, and the weather has suddenly become extremely cold. The formation of ice renders it difficult or impossible to get water; and when once the flames have burst forth—as in the terrible case of the Spottswood Hotel at Richmond—they are seldom extinguished so long as anything remains for them to consume. As the temperature becomes lower, the number of stoves, furnaces and other generators of heat is naturally increased, and a large proportion of these are suffered to remain burning at night. While the occupants are asleep, a coal tumbling from the grate, a defective pipe or flue, or a match lying in contact with some overheated surface, begins the mischief which ends in calamity or perhaps in death.

The great fire of New-York, in December, 1835, originated under much the same atmospheric conditions as those that now prevail; and people cannot be too careful during the heavy frosts to guard against similar disaster. There is no way to put out any considerable fire except by the application of water,—for the scientific devices for the purpose are as yet only practicable on a very small scale. When heavy ice abounds, water either cannot be had at all or is got only after long delay. Hence, during the cold weather, the immense importance of depending on prevention rather than cure. To act about this effectually, all places where fire is used, and all the conduits to or from them for smoke or ventilation, should be closely and frequently examined. All open grates should be guarded by suitable shields of wire, or other close metal bars, and never left at night without them. Servants should be enjoined to observe regular and scrupulous precautions, and not only enjoined but watched to see that their employers' orders are obeyed. Kerosene and similar fluids should be kept as much out of the way as possible, and gas-burners, near curtains or in other dangerous situations, should be very cautiously handled. Some people have the habit of ridiculing persistent solicitude respecting apparent trifles of this nature; but when we read of such appalling catastrophes as that of Richmond, where so many persons were burned alive, people may well endure being laughed at for the sake of safety.

A means of security in the freezing or, indeed, in any weather, is one that in modern houses is easily provided. It is to keep a supply of water always at hand and drawn from the pipes so that in case of accident it can be immediately used. The bath-tub is a convenient receptacle for this purpose, and if a couple of pails and a hundred feet of hose are also close by, the security is so much the more valuable. Every housekeeper knows that the water sometimes freezes, and does not come when wanted through its usual channels; and hence the wisdom of this precaution. In the absence of a bath a common tub, or even two or three pails full of water may be the means of preventing serious mischief. Especially in suburban places, where fire-engines are often a long way off, should safeguards like these be adopted, and people should accustom themselves to remember the possibility of a sudden alarm, and determine how they will act in case it occurs.

Stock Stampeed on Juan Ketch.

Butler County in Kansas appears to be the theatre just now of some rather extraordinary proceedings. That particular form of lawlessness known as lynching is unhappily too common in many parts of the South and West to call for especial comment. But hitherto, at least, its outrages have been committed on the side and ostensibly in the interests of justice. When lynching comes to be boldly adopted as one of the appliances of crime,—when rascality occupies the judgment seat and coolly sets about hanging honesty in the name of "public safety,"—it seems time to ask what the community is coming to. Not long ago, we expressed a fear that excessive indulgence in the luxuries of mob-law would lead to some such result, and Butler County in Kansas, if accounts are true, is a fair way to justify our apprehensions.

For some two or three years past that vicinity has been the chosen hunting-ground of a band of horse-thieves, whose circle seems to have embraced the largest if not the most influential part of the population, and included doctors, merchants and farmers. An island in the Arkansas River served as the depot for their stolen stock, and was guarded night and day. In the entire behavior of these worthies there seems to have been a frank scorn of concealment which smacks not a little of the days when Scottish moss trooper and robber Baron confessed a whole code of property laws into the simple maxim:

"Let him take who has the power,
And let him keep who can."

When our Kansas free lances saw an animal they fancied they forthwith took him, and if the owner was presumptuous enough to remonstrate, threatened to blow him to unmentionable places. Sometimes they diversified the performance by recognizing in somebody else's most desirable cattle their own long-lost property, and the owner was lucky if he escaped lynching as a horse-thief. Apparently their operations had come to be regarded as a matter of course, a legitimate business speculation; at least no very vigorous opposition appears to have been offered until a month or two ago. Then some particularly glaring outrage inspired certain of the horse-owning party to surprise and hang two of the horse-appropriating faction. It is characteristic of the place that any appeal to the organized authorities seems never for a moment to have been thought of. The horse-thieves at once began reprisals, had several of the opposition arrested and clapped into jail, and threaten to lynch them if they are acquitted. At last accounts they held military possession of the entire county, and were arresting all of the respectable citizens who had not already fled from their menaces.

This certainly presents a striking picture of Kansas society. Some years ago, a similar organization of horse-thieves held sway in the central part of this State. They were numerous, wealthy, and powerful, and as their votes made and unmade Sheriffs and Judges, for a long time successfully defied the law. But we do not remember that even this influential body ever undertook to administer the laws otherwise than by proxy. That pleasing innovation was left for a younger and bolder civilization to accomplish. Perhaps the characteristic of Butler County sentiment may find its way into politics, and we shall have a horse-thief party electing its candidates upon a platform of communism in regard to property and universal amnesty for crimes.

Another Flying-Machine.

The world looks upon all fresh attempts to discover the means of enabling human beings to fly, with deep-seated incredulity. Experience teaches doubt, but we cannot help regarding the philosophers who thus sacrifice brains and substance for the common weal with a degree of affection. That they will lose their time and money we feel sure; yet we cannot get over an instinctive persuasion that it is in a good cause. After all, COLUMBUS and GALILEO, and HARVEY and WHITNEY, did discover something, although each in his time was subjected, not to ridicule alone, but to persecution; and we know that just as there was a first time for them, or for WATT or FULTON, or Prof. MORSE, so there must be a first time for the successful vindication of the human right to fly. The scientific authorities may assure us that for man to fly is impossible; but the scientific authorities said exactly the same thing beforehand of the achievements of each of the discoverers we have mentioned. Hence a modest tolerance becomes blended with our unbelief, and we strive, each in his way, to modify dogma as regards the future by judicious remembrance of the past.

San Francisco, which sends us gold nuggets, huge fruits, delicate wines, clever pianists, and even sketches and stories flavored with the nascent promise of a coming literature, is also rich in inventors. Her inventors, too, as becomes a fresh and romantic country, run, so to speak, to the Utopian or impracticable. A short time back one of them promised us a machine named the Avitor. It was to alight in the Central Park some fine morning in six hours and a half from the Golden Gate. Some unlucky accident prevented this wished-for consummation, and the Avitor vanished from the columns of the newspapers, if not "into thin air," and was heard of no more. A fresh candidate now appears for public favor, and for that of the elastic but obstinate atmosphere. Mr. J. B. MORROW, a citizen of San Francisco, and, according to the Bulletin of that city, a practical engineer, is hard at work on a model which, when completed, is to do what the Avitor failed to do. It consists of a balloon, of course, with a frame-work attached, and, just under the balloon, an arm and shaft at the end of which are propellers by which the engineer may guide the vessel wherever he will, regardless of wind and without either increasing or diminishing his store of gas. The shaft is worked by a double, upright engine, set within the frame-work, and driven by a boiler "of peculiar construction, combining the forces of steam and air, so that ten gallons of water will drive a ten-horse power engine five hours." We are, moreover, informed that "on a level with the boiler is the frame on which the saloon for passengers is to be constructed," and that several scientific men have examined the machine, and expressed their conviction that Mr. Morrow "has made important discoveries in the art of aerial navigation."

The assurance is gratifying, and we wish Mr. Morrow every success, but, alas! if it is impossible to forget that several scientific men also examined and expressed similar opinions about the Avitor. Our hopes are, therefore, not entirely free from misgivings; and, if the inventor will pardon the reflection, there is a sound of hope deferred about his very name calculated to excite a superstitious skepticism. Despite all this, we shall rejoice to hear that the new machine plays the part of COCKRANE to the Avitor's VERPLANCK, and that we have another boon, and one that may prove richer than all its gold, to our stalwart young Commonwealth of the West.

MINOR TOPICS.

The statue of TWEED, it appears, is to be placed in some conspicuous part of the Central Park, partly as a memento of the fact that the Park, once the pride of the City, has passed into the hands of the Tweed gang, and partly because it is naturally supposed that a public which can allow a man like TWEED to arrive at his present position cannot possibly have too much of him. It is very proper that the foremost man in the City, if not of the time, should have his "counterfeit presentment" placed in some position where everybody could see it. It may be that TWEED's face and TWEED's figure will present some very awkward difficulties to the sculptor, but a faithful fixture will be acceptable to the people. The circumstances of Mr. TWEED's life have prevented him being known to the public at large. Only a few years ago he was a mere loafer about bar-rooms—now he is a millionaire, with at least two daily newspapers of his own, and one weekly magazine. He has never done any honest work, and yet is rolling in riches—makes as much money as he pleases out of the public every day, and distributes occasional "largesse" to the poor whom he has robbed—like a Baron of the feudal ages, who swept a man's land of his crops, and then gave him a crust of dry bread. "We wish him a place in heaven after his pilgrimage here," writes one of his admirers in a morning paper. The less his admirer says on that subject the better, unless Rev. Mr. SABINE happens to have any special information in his possession to justify the continuance of the discussion.

If anything could add to the indignation which will be generally felt respecting the course of Rev. W. T. SABINE in refusing to read the burial service over the remains of the late GEORGE HOLLAND, it would be the knowledge of the fact that Mr. HOLLAND attended during life the church into which he was only thought unfit for admission after death. Mr. SABINE did not tell Mr. JEFFERSON that he was willing to read the service over Mr. HOLLAND in his own house. He simply refused to read it at all. His advice to the son of the deceased, who accompanied Mr. JEFFERSON, to "go to the little church round the corner," only added an element of absurdity to the brutality of his conduct. If it had not been for Doctor HANCE's extensive and lucrative practice among the members of Mr. HOLLAND's calling, there might have been a "Rev." WILLIAM T. SABINE at all. He would, in default of proper training, have been compelled to earn a livelihood in some career which gave him fewer opportunities of exhibiting intolerance in the name of religion.

In their general tenor the war telegrams are unusually favorable to France. In the east, Dijon has again been evacuated by the Prussians, and two attempts to storm the fortress of Belfort have been repulsed. Below Paris, the little redoubt on Mount Avron succeeds, with the help of the adjacent forts, in holding its own against the Prussian fire. Outworks are said to have been completed beyond Mont Valerien which threaten the safety of Versailles. The position at Maison Blanche, gained in the sortie of Wednesday, the 21st, has evidently been retained, and the confidence of the people and garrison of the city continues unabated. Allowing for slight exaggeration in the French dispatches, the German troops are evidently suffering to a considerable extent from the inclemency of the season. Inflammation of the eyes is said to be especially prevalent—a fact which has, for many reasons, a strong inherent probability. Of the sufferings of the French population in the wasted provinces we hear nothing, but they must, necessarily, be terrible.

An improvement has been introduced on the Sixth and Eighth avenue lines of horse-cars, which we should be glad to see adopted by all the other lines. It consists of the insertion in each door of the car of a small pane of tin or wood, fitted with a sliding panel, through the aperture of which the conductor may collect fares from passengers riding on the front platform without opening the door. Simple as the arrangement is, it adds appreciably to the comfort of all who are compelled to use these vehicles, which in Winter admirably exemplify the truth that an atmosphere may be cold without being pure. Those of our readers who have suffered from sudden currents of Wintry air, in order that conductors might be saved the inconvenience of stepping off and on the car, will know how to value the innovation.

The determined attempt made on Wednesday evening to assassinate Gen. PRIM is an index to the violent opposition which has, in many quarters, been excited by the election of Prince AMADEUS to the Spanish throne. Such an outrage is as purposeless as it is dastardly, for much as the personal influence of PRIM may avail the new King, it is highly probable that the fact of his murder from motives of political enmity, would only have given new strength to the friends of the order of things which he has done so much to bring about. As it is, his escape from the pistols of the assassins will give him a fresh hold over the attachment of an impulsive and generous populace.

That Prussia has no disposition to find a fresh quarrel upon her hands may be readily believed. It is no less obvious, however, that England owed the prompt satisfaction that has been tendered for the Seine outrage, as much to the firmness of her demand on the subject, and her late exhibition of warlike determination, as to the real merits of the question at issue. It is to be presumed that the parties at any rate party have, for the present, received their quietus in Great Britain, the Government having at length discovered that even from an economical point of view, it is better to show an occasional disposition to fight than tamely submit to any insult from a great Power short of actual violation of territory.

The house of HOHENZOLLERN-SIGMARINGEN appears to have been destined to exercise a sinister influence upon the peace of Europe during the year 1870. Prince LEOPOLD's candidature for the Spanish throne was the proximate cause of the present war, and now we find the Government of his brother, Prince CHARLES, throwing a challenge to the Western Powers, by casting itself adrift from the subordinate position assigned to it by the Treaty of 1866. The united Provinces of Moldavia and Wallachia, better known under their common title of Roumania, seem to have contrived a rather inopportune moment for declaring themselves free from the joint protectorate imposed upon them. When it is remembered, however, that only a few days before Roumania expressly stipulated that her relations with the Principalities should not be open to discussion in the Constitutional Conference, it is evident that no chance was left them but an open assertion of their rights, which would at least have the effect of hurrying their case into the international court choice for arbitration. This will probably result in the last addition to the Prussian embroilments of the year, and will have the effect of introducing a fresh complication into a Conference already sufficiently likely to prove abortive.

At the meeting of sympathizers with the cause of France, yesterday evening, the expression of opinion as to the attitude of the Republic in the present struggle were, in the main, moderately and justly stated. The enthusiasm of the crowded audience sufficiently proved how intense is the sympathy which is felt by a large section of our community with struggling France. Our Irish fellow-citizens were notably fervid in their appreciation of the objects of the meeting, which, viewed as a means of eliciting public sentiment, must be pronounced a decided success.

We have had too frequent occasion to advert to the dangers of using the adulterated compound usually sold as kerosene oil. We publish this morning a very sad story from our correspondent at Poughkeepsie, which shows that so-called "non-explosive" substitutes are by no means free from fatal ingredients. The case of the poor girl who was to have been a bride on New-Year's Day, but who, already charred, and blackened, and maimed for life, may not improbably be a corpse on the morning that was to witness her wedding, is one that calls for a searching investigation. A fluid specially sold as "non-explosive," is only a fresh trap to the public in the absence of any legal obligation to make it what it professes to be.

It seems likely that Auditor BELL's report on Canal affairs, to be submitted at the opening of the Legislature, will more than confirm all that has been said in regard to the results of Democratic control at the Canal Board. It has been for some time known that the policy which dictates the reduction of the tolls to a point below the standard fixed by the law has proved an utter failure—as it proved ten years ago, or more, when the same experiment was tried in the interest of the same party. But the Auditor reveals much more. Not only has the surplus to which Republican management accustomed the public disappeared, but the Sinking Fund has been drawn upon to meet current deficiencies. Practically, therefore, there is an increase of the debt, instead of a reduction. Without concurring entirely in the Auditor's view as to the essential supremacy of the route for Western products through this State, we have no doubt as to the general accuracy of his estimate touching the effects of tolls upon the course of trade. Experience has shown that it is possible to obtain for the canals of this State all the carrying trade they can accommodate, and at the same time maintain remunerative rates.

The fact that the Democrats have carried Georgia is, in some quarters, assigned as a reason why Attorney-General AKERMAN should retire from the Administration. A similar argument was employed in reference to Postmaster-General CRESWELL, when Maryland disappointed Republican hopes. In both of these cases the discovery originates at Washington, where professional Cabinet-makers most do congregate. The presumption seems to be that a member of the Cabinet is such by virtue of an ability to influence certain elections, or that his appointment is a recognition of the claim of a State, which claim is forfeited if the State refuse to support the party in power. On this hypothesis, Mr. FISH, as well as Messrs. AKERMAN and CRESWELL, should withdraw from the Cabinet. Nothing could be more unreasonable or mischievous. In the selection of his advisers, the President properly aims at securing a representation of the various sections of the country. Aside from this general idea, his duty is to find the best man for each vacant position, irrespective of the contingencies of a popular vote. It is not pretended that Georgia has been lost because Mr. AKERMAN is Attorney-General, and it would be absurd to deprive the country of his services on that account. If the opposite theory is to prevail, let it be carried out consistently by making a Cabinet position subject to the popular vote. Will those who clamor for changes dare to affirm frankly that principle? If not, they should hold their tongues.

Fire-Escapes to be Placed on Every Hotel in the City.

Orders were issued yesterday by Superintendent JAMES M. MACGREGOR, of the Department of Buildings, for the survey of all the hotels in this City, preparatory to requiring them to place fire-escapes upon their buildings. The Grand Central, Fifth-avenue, Hoffman House and French's Hotel were ordered to be inspected yesterday, and the notices will be served upon them today. It may not be generally known, but for some months past the question as to whether hotels could be required under the law to attach fire-escapes has been in Court, upon a suit brought by Mr. MACGREGOR against Mr. HAWKINS, one of the proprietors of the St. Nicholas. The suit was brought to test the question, and owing to the law's delay no decision has as yet been reached. The Superintendent has therefore determined to take prompt action in the premises, and, if necessary, let each proprietor test the law separately. Had the Richmond hotel been provided with escapes, probably no lives would have been lost, and in order to prevent the recurrence of a similar disaster in this City, the above course has been decided upon by the Building Department.

Sudden Death at Sag Harbor.

JAMES H. PRICE, a prominent man of Sag Harbor, holding a number of positions of trust in that village and at one time Justice of the Peace at East Hampton, suddenly expired at his residence in Sag Harbor, on Tuesday. Mr. PRICE was apparently enjoying his usual good health and attending to his daily business, and at the time of his death was in the act of fixing some food for some chickens, when he fell upon the floor and expired without a groan. The verdict of the coroner's jury was that he died from heart disease.

The Change of Administration—The Hornet Expedition—War Notes—Miscellaneous Gossip—The Opera.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HAVANA, Thursday, Dec. 22, 1870.

A different air seems to pervade all official regions since the advent of RODAS, and but few of the faces of the old hangers-on about the Palace are now met with near its confines. The ante-rooms are crowded with visitors and military men, all of them, or at least nearly all, anxious to find out for themselves whether the change of Chief may also lead to a change among the subordinates, and allow them to fatten a little in the cribs whence they have been driven onto the downfall of Madam INZAGA, of Bourbon. Up to the present, however, but few, and those very unimportant, changes have taken place, though as much cannot be said about military movements. VALMASEDA has gone to work in real earnest, and if he is not a brilliant genius, he has at least sufficient talent to send hundreds of regulars to the interior who were idly garrisoning some towns in the Vuelta Abajo, or were stationed in and about Havana. Three companies of engineers and the second battalion of the Regiment Espana have already gone forward, and those who arrive from Spain are equipped and armed with the greatest possible dispatch, and shipped for the Central and Eastern Departments. A detachment will be landed at Savannah la Mar and another at the mouth of the Cauto River. These detachments will move in easterly and westerly directions toward Guantanamo and Las Tunas, while the troops at Embarcadero and Pass del Cauto will move southerly, so as to have those at Las Tunas guard the cross-line. VALMASEDA expects to free the entire jurisdiction of Las Tunas in this manner. The celebrated guerrilla leader, MONTANEZ, was in town on Tuesday, and left again on the following day. It is understood that VALMASEDA has curtailed the powers which RODAS conferred, and has ordered MONTANEZ to act in strict consonance with the movements of other parties, taking the contra-guerrillas from Santa Cruz to Guaicanamar, and thence striking a line to Las Tunas, crossing between Guaimarillo and Berrocal. Col. MIRIN, commanding the artillery battalion now operating in the Central Department, has also arrived, and after consulting with the Captain-General, will return to his post. All officers of any importance have received instructions through trusty emissaries of VALMASEDA, and after the next two or three weeks we may expect to hear of some concerted movement. The Spaniards must necessarily obtain some success, as the increased activity of the troops, and the reinforcements daily going forward to swell the Spanish ranks, must necessarily produce some result. The twenty-five hundred men which arrived from Spain within the present week will serve admirably to guard forts and detachments, while the present acclimatized garrisons will take the field. But all these grand movements and preparations, no matter how well they may be planned or carried out, will be but transitory unless the navy can prevent the landing of the expeditions known to be on the way. The mere numerical strength of the so-called filibusters amounts to very little, but the moral effect produced cannot be over estimated. The landing of but fifty men produces a deep impression among all classes; the Cubans in the field acquire more confidence, and the lukewarm remain in the ranks, instead of deserting and surrendering to the Spaniards, as they have been doing of late. The non-fighting portion of the Cubans and sympathizers are galvanized into new life, and run great risks in sending ammunition and clothing to their countrymen in the field, provided they can see that the chances of ultimate triumph are not diminishing. If by some streak of luck the Spaniards could get the only two Generals of the Cubans out of the way, the revolution would receive a severe blow. I refer, of course, to Gens. DIAZ and MARCSO, the Dominicans. Of the original leaders of the revolution we hear very little; BARRETTA is sick; IGNACIO AGRAMONTE is rarely mentioned, and CAVADA has not fulfilled any of his promises. New men, whose deeds have not been heralded with so many flourishes, have taken their places, and are doing more work with a less number of men, lessened resources and a stronger enemy. The chaff has been discovered and separated from the wheat.

THE "HORNET" EXPEDITION.

Everybody is, of course, on the alert to learn of the whereabouts and doings of the Hornet. It will be a very easy matter for her or any other vessel to land when and wherever she wishes to. It took three days to get a man-of-war ready to go to Nassau, and three days more for another to coal, and go in her pursuit along the Keys. The Spanish Navy is composed of fine ships, with excellent crews, but as a whole is undoubtedly entitled to being called a splendidly mismanaged institution. The Hornet arrived at Nassau on the 15th, with about seventy men aboard, and, after entering the harbor, made a request to be allowed to coal, which request was refused by the English authorities. The Spanish Consul then called on the Governor and demanded the seizure of the ship as a pirate, and the Governor was agreeing, when the matter "leaked out," and the Hornet weighed her anchor and steamed out to sea. A British gunboat was sent after her, but did not even get a sight of her, the Hornet making over eleven knots easily. It is understood here that the Hornet will go to Venezuela and take the arms and ammunition at the Billy Bulla on board and then bring them to Cuba.

WAR NOTES.

When Gen. ARECOCHEA was captured near Holguin, another Cuban officer, Don FEGUNDO CABLES was also captured and thirteen killed. ....The captured Cuban officer, JOSE CAYETANO SANTOS, was tried by a Court-martial at Cienfuegos, as an incendiary, and found guilty and executed....From information received, the troops went to a place near Guanaroi, where they found a rifled Parrot gun, which the Cubans had been unable to carry away. The cannon was easily captured, as there was nobody to defend it....It is reported that the Cuban General FOILCARPE RUSTAN died from the effects of the wound he received in the attack on Mayari.

MISCELLANEOUS GOSSIP.

The Government is establishing seven new telegraph lines with all possible dispatch. Some of them had been destroyed by the insurgents. ....One of the supposed assassins of Mr. GUSTAV OBERLANDER, the German who was killed by robbers, has been arrested....The rumor that Vice-President AGUILERA had been captured by a gun-boat turned out a mere invention....A number of Mexican and Central American Bishops are returning from Rome to their dioceses, and passed through Havana.

THE OPERA.

The opera has proved to be a partial failure, and the old saying of "shoemaker stick to your last" is again applicable. A man may sell poor whisky and yet retain his customers, but those who partake of intellectual food are not so easily satisfied as those who merely satisfy a depraved appetite. The management of the opera in other hands would have been successful. It is intended to bring some singers from New-York, but, if present appearances and the general impression can be relied on, the opera will have been played off or cut before reinforcements can arrive. QUASIMODO.

Reception at the Academy of Design.

Last evening a reception took place at the Academy of Design, and a private view was afforded by some 150 foreign pictures by eminent modern artists, which have recently been added to the exhibition. They comprise specimens by Bouguereau, Merle, Marechal de Metz, Leys, Calame, Achenbach, Koek Koek, Breton, Boutibonne, Plassan, Diaz, Jacque, Cailly, Hoche, Lewies, Bonsenan, Van Marcke, Alfred Stevens, Richter, Troyon, Riem, and many others.

The pictures were purchased in Paris, we believe, shortly before the breaking out of hostilities, and are certainly the largest and most noticeable importation of works of art ever brought to this country at any one time. A notice of the principal pictures will appear in our usual Sunday Art article.

AMUSEMENTS.

Theatrical.

"THE ROAD TO RUIN" AT WALLACK'S.

HOLCROFT'S most sprightly, yet most affecting comedy, was played last night at Wallack's for the last time this season. It has been one of the most successful of the revived old plays here, and the tidiness of its withdrawal are heard with regret. There have been some drawbacks in its representation, which we have noted before, and need not mention again; but even these have become less conspicuous with repetition, so that the performance of last evening was very smooth and satisfactory indeed. The Old Domion of Mr. GILBERT is a piece of exquisite art. Were there no other fine acting in the comedy, for the sake of this gem alone we should be sorry to take leave of "The Road to Ruin." Mr. FISHER is, however, a capital Goldstock, and nearly all the remaining parts have been noted with a level excellence characteristic truly of Wallack's, but rarely to be enjoyed elsewhere. Tonight "The Heir at Law" is to be repeated—also for the last time this season—and to-morrow night there will be a similar representation of "The Serious Family." The usual Saturday matinee will be omitted, in order to give the time to a full rehearsal of "War," Mr. BOUCICAULT's new play, which is to be produced for the first time on next Tuesday evening.

RIP VAN WINKLE AT BOOTH'S THEATRE.

Mr. JEFFERSON'S performance of Rip Van Winkle is intended to reach its one hundred and fifth night, a thing almost unprecedented in dramatic history. Speculation, it is true, often exceed this record; but for a play which depends upon acting solely, and the acting of a single character at that, to reach such a figure, is an event well worthy of notice and appreciation. We do not doubt that "Rip Van Winkle" might have been played with profit some time longer; but previous arrangements, made both by Mr. JEFFERSON and Mr. BOOTH, render this impossible. The latter gentleman will make his first appearance for the season on Jan. 9, in the character of Richelieu; for which event, we are told, careful and elaborate preparations are being made.

Musical.

THE ITALIAN OPERA.

Mr. DE VIVO has now made public his intended arrangements for the forthcoming season of Italian opera. The principal names mentioned are those of Mme. ROSE CHILLAS, Signor LEFRANC, Signor REYNA and Signor SUSINI. A full chorus and orchestra are promised, and the manager assures us that, with fair evidence on the part of the public to support his enterprise, he will make energetic attempts to deserve their favor. We wish Mr. DE VIVO every success, and hope that lovers of the opera will show a liberal spirit in his behalf. The opening night is fixed for Wednesday, Jan. 4, and the first opera sung will be "Il Trovatore."

MOUNT WASHINGTON IN WINTER.

The Meteorological Party at the Summit—Their History and Experiences.

From the Boston Traveller, Dec. 28.

Everybody knows that Mount Washington, in New-Hampshire, is visited by thousands of persons in the Summer months, and that its climate corresponds better with that of Labrador or Greenland than that of New-England. In the Winter universal desolation reigns there; not even the proprietors of the hotels upon the summit venturing from their snug quarters below to learn what avenue from the world is open for the time being. The rigmes declared it to be sure death if any one climbed the mountain, since it was the sanctuary of divinities who would not suffer their abode to be scanned with impunity. Their successors first adventurously found the summit, then erected rude places for shelter, and finally constructed a carriage road and railway, so that even the most feeble persons could view the broad panorama. But these visits were confined to the warmer months, with a few rare exceptions.

HISTORY OF THE PRESENT EXPEDITION.

Twelve years ago Profs. C. H. HITCHCOCK and J. H. HUNTINGTON, independently of each other, conceived the idea of spending the Winter on the summit of Mt. Washington, but the project did not take shape until the organization of the geological survey of New-Hampshire in 1868. They found it impossible to make the necessary preparation for occupying the summit during the Winter of 1869, chiefly for want of a dwelling. Hence they sought for a less elevated summit, where a single Winter's experience might prepare the way for the greater adventure. That peak was Moosilauke—nearly 5,000 feet above the ocean. The men, D. G. MILLER, of Warren, N. H., obligingly placed his house at the service of Prof. HUNTINGTON and his comrade, A. F. CLOUGH, of Warren, photographer. Their three months' occupation of Moosilauke was full of adventure, and experiences were acquired of the highest importance. The scientific results were important—disclosing the knowledge of violent winds there accurately measured, and remarkable forms of frostwork never before described or photographed. Attention was called to the mountain, and a carriage road became a necessity, which was constructed in the follow ing Summer.

In the month of September, 1869, the Mount-Washington Railway Company generously tendered the use of their depot upon the summit, to this meteorological party during the Winter, and the necessary supplies were immediately purchased and forwarded to the mountain. The enterprise, though of a meteorological character, has been adopted by the geological survey of the State, while the expense has been assumed by the State geologist, relying upon a sympathizing public to provide the funds by subscription. Nearly enough has been subscribed to meet the amounts already paid out, and it is hoped that friends will not allow the adventurous observers to suffer any pecuniary loss in return for their labors. They expect no remuneration for services, only their necessary expenses.

While some were busily engaged in transporting supplies up the summit and preparing the buildings for comfortable occupation, others were occupied in the less agreeable task of soliciting subscriptions. In the midst of the preparations, the acquaintance of Mr. R. A. NELSON, of Georgetown, Mass., was made. He had been for many years one of the Smithsonian meteorological observers, and had, independently of the others, conceived the idea of spending a Winter among the Arctic Hills of New-Hampshire for science. After an interchange of views, Mr. NELSON became identified with the expedition.

Congress recently appropriated funds for the establishment of a "Bureau of Telegrams and Reports for the Benefit of Commerce." After some correspondence with the efficient officer in charge of this Bureau, Gen. MYER ordered an insulated telegraph wire, with suitable instruments, to be sent to the mountain, in order to facilitate the transmission of the meteorological reports, both to the public and to the office of the Bureau in Washington. The wire has been laid, and the summit is now in telegraphic communication with the world; and the Chief Signal Officer also detailed for special service upon the mountain an experienced telegrapher and meteorologist, Sergt. THEODORE SMITH, of the United States Army.

The photographers of the expedition are A. F. CLOUGH, of Warren, and Moosilauke fame, and HOWARD A. KIMBALL, of Concord, N. H., both eminent in their profession. The latter gentleman spent much time in providing photographic material for the mountain, and in soliciting subscriptions. Their views of the peculiar phenomena of the mountain will soon be on exhibition.

Thus the party consists of six persons: Prof. HITCHCOCK, whose office in Hanover, N. H., is connected by telegraph with the summit; Prof. HUNTINGTON and Mr. NELSON, observers; Messrs. CLOUGH and KIMBALL, photographers, and Sergt. SMITH, telegrapher and observer. All of them are not upon the mountain at the same time; they relieve each other to a considerable extent in the work, and the public will be kept informed of their whereabouts.

THE ASCENT IN WINTER.

From the depot of the Mount Washington Railway, in Summer, the ascent, on foot, if a person is accustomed to walking, is comparatively easy. Although the rise are three feet apart, and there is a rise of a foot in three a pace of the way, yet a person with muscles strong from exercise can walk to the very summit of the mountain without sitting down to rest. But suppose it is Winter.

The snow has accumulated to a considerable depth, even in the vales, but there is no great hindrance; about depth, however, be attempted a journey on foot, will find that the snow, which was compressed beneath the feet has changed to ice, and the oval forms give a still less secure footing; if it is thawing, and the ice is almost ready to slip off as you tread upon it, every one will see that upon a treadle thirty feet high walking is perilous, and requires nerve, and to walk down is a feat from which even a most expert acrobat would shrink. If at the depot we take snow shoes, we can walk with comparative ease half way up, and then the snow is so compact that they are no longer needed, and as they are few irregularities on the surface the walking is better than in Summer.

Above the limit of the trees the railway is covered with ice of every fantastic shape, and the framework of the Giant vault is now so ornamented that one can hardly believe that it is the rude structure we see in Summer. The Lizzie Bourne monument, which we have been accustomed to see only a rough pile of stones, is now an object of architectural beauty such as no sculptor can carve from marble. Immediately above the dominant the timber, trestle work completely covered with ice, stretches forward extending two or three feet horizontally from the timber on which the track is laid, and every piece of timber, which forms the trestle is ornamented with beautiful forms of "frost work," deposited in graceful curves as the wind sweeps through the trestle.

On the lower side of the summit the piles of rock and stones, so rough in Summer, are now completely covered with frost, while the snow fills the spaces between the jagged rocks. On the sides of the buildings toward the north-west the frost has accumulated so that now it is more than a foot in thickness. The "frost work" on the dome, while it has everywhere the same general appearance, the points show exactly the direction of the wind as it came into every nook and corner of the building. The frost on the braces and timbers that extend outward seems like one titanic mass, and on the chains it is often two feet in diameter.

THE STAY ON THE MOUNTAIN.

Although I was on the mountain for ten days in October, yet I did not feel so well prepared until Nov. 15. It was expected that some of the party would be ready to go with me, but as they were not I went alone, and it was not until the last day of November that any one came, so I had the house and the mountain all to myself for nearly three weeks. During the most of the time the weather was remarkably pleasant. On the 15th, all day long, and far into the night the clouds were below the summit of the mountain, and most of the time they covered the entire country. At times only the very highest point of Mount Washington was above the clouds. It reminded me forcibly of the time, during the Champlain period, when the whole of New-England, except Mount Washington, was beneath the waves of the ocean. As the masses of clouds came over Adams and Jefferson, I looked until I almost persuaded myself that they were immense icebergs coming from the uplifted frozen North, but the illusion vanished as the summits appeared above the clouds. But what was remarkable is that the next day was pleasant.

During the last two weeks in November, the average of the thermometer was 10°. The wind was northwest nearly the whole time. The weather was generally very mild, and the number of clear days was much greater than the average. J. H. H.

DANGER OF "NON-EXPLOSIVE OIL"

Explosion of a Patent "Perfectly Safe" Lamp—Horrible Burning of a Young Woman in Poughkeepsie.

From Our Own Correspondent.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Thursday, Dec. 29, 1870.

A terrible accident occurred here last night in the house of JOHN LOCKHART, No. 477 Main-street. A boarder in the family, a young woman about twenty-four years of age, who came to the house some three weeks ago, stating that she was a shirt-maker, and giving her name as MARY GIBSON, was horribly and perhaps fatally burned by the explosion of a lamp in the room, containing what is known as DARFORTH'S Non-Explosive Oil. At the time of the accident, she was sewing in a room upon the second floor, in company with a little girl, a daughter of the LOCKHARTS. According to the child's statement, the lamp exploded quite suddenly, scattering the oil, which immediately was caught by the flames, over the person of the unfortunate woman. The latter, enveloped in flames, ran to a pantry, caught up some blankets, and made desperate efforts to smother the fire, but failing fell to the floor, exhausted by the excruciating pain; and the child, with a terrifying shriek, rushed down stairs to inform the family. Mr. LOCKHART, hurrying up, found, to use his own expression, that "the flames were then three feet high all around the poor girl;" she was crawling upon her hands and knees, uttering heart-rending cries, toward the door leading to the entry. Mr. LOCKHARTS endeavored in three attempts to tear the clothes from her person, but was each time unsuccessful, burning his own hands and arms in a horrible manner. By this time the sufferer had reached the southern end of the hallway, where all sorts of clothing was heaped upon her by Mr. and Mrs. LOCKHART, who had joined her husband from below-stairs, and they finally succeeded in smothering the flames, but not before the girl became unconscious. When the clothing was removed, a horrible sight met the view. The girl's face, arms and breast, and other portions of her body, were burned in a terrible manner. She was laid upon a cot, and physicians summoned. Drs. COGGSHALL, CARPENTER and TOMPKINS after arrived. In order to dress the burns properly it was found necessary to cut hanging pieces of blackened and charred flesh from the trunk and arms, and so intensely did the victim suffer that her agonizing cries could be heard a long way off. It her ravings she was heard to exclaim, "I will live yet, I will live yet!" and then she would speak affectionately of some person unknown. Some one in the house stated that she came from Newburg, and that she had a brother and sister in Troy, and a mother at Providence, R. I.; but she was only known in this city as MARY GIBSON. At 9 o'clock this morning, when it was ascertained that she has a brother on Sixth-avenue, New-York City, and that she was to have been married on New-Year's Day to a man named JOSEPH K. NEWTON, of Hartland, Conn. The physicians say, this morning, that her condition is extremely doubtful, but they give no hopes of her recovery. Her brother has just arrived here from New-York.

A TERRIBLE DEATH.

Boiler Explosion in Brooklyn—Two Men Killed.

At the corner of North Thirteenth and Second streets, Brooklyn, E. D., last night, in the iron foundry of MILLER & DEVLIN, a scene of horror such as rarely occurs, even in large cities, was enacted, and ended with the loss of two human lives and the destruction of $18,000 worth of property. In the foundry there is, or rather was, a boiler of immense size used for the production of steam to turn all the machinery used. By some strange piece of negligence, about 8 o'clock the water was permitted to get too low, and just as the fireman was approaching to set the matter right, the boiler exploded with a sound that startled the entire neighborhood and shook the buildings for twenty blocks around.

The effect upon the neighboring population was indescribable. Hundreds rushed out in desperation, anxious to ascertain whether or not some of their friends had suffered by the catastrophe, for such all quickly learned it to be. To add still more to the general consternation, great lurid flames began to shoot up all around the spot, and in a few moments the entire work appeared to be on fire. No time, however, was lost in getting to work for the suppression of the flames; the firemen were on the spot with great promptitude, and succeeded in directing such a flood of water upon the structure, that in a few minutes all possibility of a conflagration vanished. On the suppression of the fire, and when time was given to clear matters up, it was found that two men had been killed by the explosion. These, on examination, proved to be the engineer and the fireman of the establishment, NICHOLAS FRYMIRE and DANIEL MULHOLLAND, the former of whom was unmarried, but the latter, who is quite a young man, leaves a wife and one child to mourn his loss. The property was, as stated already, damaged to the extent of $10,000, but it is fully covered by insurance.

HOLIDAY FESTIVALS.

Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, One Hundred and Forty-fourth-street, Near Ninth-avenue.

The first Christmas festival of the Sunday-school of the neat little church was celebrated on the 27th inst.

The church was profusely and beautifully decorated with the delightful evergreens of the season. Two Christmas trees, with the usual accompaniments, were placed in the aisles, and in every scholar was given a book or some suitable present, a beautiful box filled with confectionery, a cake and orange. Besides these, various rewards were distributed to children who had earned them; in fact, some of the little folks were nearly loaded down with gifts.

The services consisted of singing and recitations of Scripture, and were diversified by the surprise gifts of beautiful cake-baskets, respectively, to Dr. DITES, the faithful Superintendent, and Mr. A. E. CONOVER, the active, zealous and liberal Secretary of the school. To these gentlemen much of the success of this new institution is due.

The public services were followed by an entertainment in one of the class-rooms of the church. Coffee, ice-cream and cakes were served in abundance.

The missionaries, Revs. MESSRS. RICHMOND and KITCHEN, of the New-York City Sunday-school and Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, who helped to found and sustain this church, were present and took part in the services.

The celebration speaks well for this young school, which has proved a great blessing to the neighborhood, and verifies the wisdom of the society in locating a church in this part of our City, now sparsely settled, but in due time to become crowded with dwelling-houses.

Celebration at the Shepherd's Fold.

An interesting Christmas celebration took place, yesterday afternoon, at the institution of the Shepherd's Fold, on Eighty-fourth-street, near Second-avenue. The dining-room, which was devoted to the occasion, was handsomely decorated with evergreen, and a lofty Christmas tree, from whose spreading branches many tempting gifts were suspended, was, of course, the centre of attraction. The following ladies, through whose kindness the festival was gotten up, were present: Mrs. Lee, Mrs. Roberts, Mrs. Carmichael, Miss Snow, Miss Hamilton, Rev. Mrs. Thrall, and Mrs. A. L. Brown. The little ones, to the number of sixty-four, marched in single file into the dining-room, the girls taking the lead, and as they passed on the many uses of the Christmas tree, their delighted, cheerful happy faces lit up with fresh joy.

The exercises began by a carol by the children, "Merry Christmas," after which prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. CARROLL. An appropriate address by Rev. Mr. ARTHUR followed, and then many singing recitations, readings, &c., by the children, all of which were very creditably rendered. Many handsome prizes were distributed to the most deserving. The most interesting portion of the exercises was the last, which consisted in removing from the tree the toys, dolls, fruits, fancy articles, &c., on which the children had been admitted to reading for an hour. To each of them one or more gifts were presented, and the remainder of the evening was spent in a very pleasant manner at the Shepherd's Fold.

Grace Church, West Farms, Westchester County.

The Sunday-school of Grace Church held their annual Christmas festival in the church on Monday evening. The church was tastefully decorated, and, with the Christmas tree conspicuous in front of the chancel, presented a beautiful appearance. The children entered the church from the vestry-room door, singing a spirited march, "Onward, Christian Soldier," with fine effect. The other musical selections call for more than ordinary praise for their melody and musical rendering.

The tree was conspicuous for the ornaments displayed and the beauty of the presents. After the exercises had commenced, which was made on a liberal scale, the children were addressed by Rev. Mr. QUERNELL, of New-York, and by the rector of the church, Rev. A. H. GRENE, in a few happily-chosen remarks. The church was densely crowded by a delighted and attentive audience.

Other Festivities.

The children of St. George's (German) Mission, in Fourteenth-street, near First-avenue, enjoyed their Christmas festival last evening. This Mission has been a great source of benefit to the Germans, who are very numerous in this district, and many of them were present last evening, and took much interest in the exercises. After many fine carols had been sung, and addresses delivered by Rev. Dr. TYNG and Rev. Mr. FLESHHACKER, presents were distributed to each of the children.

One of the most imposing Christmas festivals was that held at St. John's Chapel, on Tuesday last. Over 2,500 children, and as many spectators, participated in the joyful occasion. A beautiful Christmas tree, ever thirty feet high, was erected over the chancel, and being illuminated with a calcium light from the west side of the Chancel, the effect was very fine. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. WARNER and Rev. Dr. DIX, and the usual presents distributed to the children.

The members of the Sunday-school of Calvary Chapel, in Worth-street, celebrated the Christmas festival last evening by the enjoyment of a substantial dinner and a series of religious and musical exercises. The chapel was suitably decorated for the occasion, and the 180 persons in attendance did ample justice to the good things prepared for them. The musical exercises, which were of a varied and interesting character, were conducted under the superintendence of Rev. J. H. BRADLEY, Pastor.

Butchers' Strike at Communipaw.

All the butchers at the Communipaw Abattoir have been discharged, on account of some disagreement with their employers arising on account of the Butchers' Union. The animals to be killed are brought from the West in droves, and under the Union rules they receive a full day's wages for killing a "drove," be it large or small. If one man has not enough cattle to keep the men busy for a day they will not bill and charge for the time occupied, neither will they allow the contractor to secure from others sufficient animals to make a full day's work. This is the cause of the disagreement. On Wednesday other butchers were employed, but on finding that they would not be allowed to form a Union they refused to work. The employers are determined to hold out, and have transferred their orders to Forty-second-street, New-York.

New Iron Bridge Over West Chester Creek.

The Eastern Boulevard Westchester County Commissioners, consisting of ABRAHAM HATFIELD, GEORGE COOPER, HIRAM LENT and THOMAS JAY BYRNE, have awarded a contract to PAULDING, KEEBLE & Co. for the construction of a substantial iron bridge across an inlet of Long Island Sound, familiarly known as West Chester Creek, on the line of the new avenue now being constructed through the town of West Chester, from Union Port to Pelham Bridge. The total length of the new bridge will be 185½ feet, and it will be 40 feet wide between the trusses. It will consist of two spans, viz.: a stationary span on the east side, 80½ feet long, and a swing or draw span, 105 feet long, the latter supported on a centre pier, 22 feet in diameter, leaving a clear space 40 feet wide on eachside of the draw when open for the passage of vessels. The spans are to have arch girders, and the draw span to have sub-arches, similar to the one across the Harlem River, with the main arch rising 13 feet at the centre, supported by 18-panelled cast-iron columns resting on the subarches. The floor beams will be solid rolled iron I-beams, 9 inches deep and weighing 70 pounds per yard. Between the iron beams, there will be stringers of yellow pine, fitted accurately and flush with the surface of the iron beams, and to these pine stringers the flooring, consisting of two courses of yellow pine plank, each 1½ inches think, will be securely spiked; one course of the plank being laid transversely or diagonally, and the other, longitudinally with the bridge. The sub-structure will consist of two piers. The draw or swing-pivot pier will be constructed of seven cast-iron hollow screw piles, arranged in a circle, and the pier to support the stationary span will be constructed of three iron hollow screw piles. The piles or columns are to be screwed firmly into solid ground not less than six feet below the bed of the stream, and after being freed from sand within are to be filled with concrete. An iron railing, three and a half feet high, will be erected on each side of the bridge, for the entire length. The contractors are to receive, for the entire work, $19,964, and it is to be completed by the 1st day of March next.

AMERICAN INSTITUTE.

Special Meeting in Favor of the International Exhibition in 1876—Explosion of Alamoos Waste.

At a special meeting of the American Institute, last evening, at the Cooper Institute, HORACE GREELEY presiding, a memorial asking the Congressional sanction of the Institute's grand project of holding an international, industrial exposition during the year 1876, in New-York City, with a circular containing a brief history of its works, past and present, was offered for consideration. The circular states that the Institute was founded in the year 1828, "to promote improvements in the mechanic arts, and to encourage American industry." The same year it held its first exhibition of American production, in this City, and the following year it was duly chartered by the Legislature of this State. Since that time, during forty-two years, it has held thirty-five national exhibitions—each succeeding one better and larger than its predecessor. Besides these general exhibitions the Institute has been in the habit of having trials of agricultural implements and persuits. It has grown great, has a library of over 13,000 volumes, and four sectional societies, the Polytechnic or Mechanical and Chemical, the Farmer's Club, the Horticultural, and the Photographical. Its members number 2,000, and among them are men of wealth and scientific attainments. In 1869 a distinguished member of the Association proposed that the year 1876—the centenary of the nation—should be celebrated by a great exhibition of the industries of the world, to be held in New-York under the auspices of the American Institute. The suggestion was adopted, and at the opening of the exhibition in 1867, the President of the Society formally announced the intention of the Institute to erect for that purpose, either in Central Park or on some other suitable site, to be presented to the City of New-York, a magnificent edifice, costing at least $1,000,000. One-third of that amount is already on hand, and the balance only awaits Congressional action.

This last clause was objected to by Mr. ALBERT NASH, who moved as an amendment "and a large portion of that amount is within the reach of the Institute." It was accepted, and Mr. NASH then made a speech condemning the entire proposition in connection with the cattle-yards in the neighborhood of Ninety-ninth-street as a job wherein the money and means of the Institute would be irretrievably sunk.

Dr. RUSH requested the Chair to call the speaker to order. Mr. GREELEY did so, but unwillingly, as Mr. NASH would not take his seat nor be denied this chance of holding the floor and carrying his point. At last Dr. RICH moved that Mr. NASH according to article 23 of the by-laws be expelled from the meeting for this flagrant violation of the rules. After much debate and discussion the question was put, and a division of the house had upon it, when it was ascertained that the vote for his expulsion stood 28 to 8 against it. He then withdrew to a seat near the door, where he was persuaded to remain, although Mr. GREELEY importuned to order his being compelled to leave the room.

The discussion on the adoption of the memorial and circular as amended was then renewed, and finally decided in the affirmative with the order that the former be resubmitted as the Institute's "Christmas." Mr. GREELEY, duly signed by the officers of the Institute, and forwarded to Washington. All the aid the Institute asks of Congress in the circular is the official sanction of the United States Government, on the ground that its great undertaking, if successful, will redound to success fit it for the management of this international exhibition. The superiority of location is another point claimed in its favor.

Illegal Appraisement of Imported Goods—An Important Suit Decided Against the Government.

During the administration of AUGUSTUS SCHELL as Collector at this port, it was the practice in appraising the valuation of imported goods for import purposes to include transportation charges, inland and coastwise, from the place of manufacture to the vessel on which they were shipped, and the commissions paid on the goods, together with the market value at the place of export. At the time importers denied the legal right to add these charges and commissions to the price paid for the goods at the place of manufacture or export, in assessing ad valorem duties, and protested against the alleged illegal excess. Subsequent to his retirement from the United States District-Attorney's office, E. DELAFIELD SMITH filed a suit on behalf of Messrs. Dodge, merchants of this City, to recover the excess in the imports, with interest on the money from the date of payment. After a protracted legal contest the suit was decided in favor of the merchant at the United States Circuit Court, which decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court. Mr. SMITH will recover about $600,000 unless the verdict is set aside on appeal by the Government. If it is sustained the Treasury will probably have to refund several million dollars to importers, whose goods have been appraised in the manner mentioned.

Alleged Wife-Murder in the Twentieth Ward—Arrest of the Culprit.

ELIZA RING, aged twenty-four, and a native of Ireland, died yesterday afternoon at No. 128 West Thirty-ninth-street in a very sudden manner. When the Twentieth Precinct Police came to investigate the case, they ascertained that the woman was supposed to have died of injuries sustained a few days ago at the hands of her husband, EDWARD RING. They had a quarrel and he beat her in a terrible manner, the deceased being shockingly bruised. As she failed to make any complaint, the Police remanded in ignorance of the facts until after her death. Dr. BEISS, of No. 351 West Forty-second-street, was called to attend Mrs. RING on the 26th inst., and on her death, which took place a short time ago, no proper certificate, so notified Capt. CAFFREY, who ordered the husband's arrest by Officer FITZGERALD last night. When the officer examined the remains of the woman he found them much discolored and swollen on the face and neck, and there were also traces of bruises on different portions of the body. The Coroner has been notified, and an investigation will probably be made today. The inmates of the house where RING and his wife resided state that they frequently quarreled, and that he generally beat her while under the influence of liquor. It is not known whether the deceased was of intemperate habits or not.

THE TAYLOR WILL.

Cross-Examination of the Witness Cooper—Why He Thinks the Will Written by George Duryea—The Evidence Yesterday.

The hearing in the Taylor contested will case, continued before Surrogate Hutchings, yesterday, was mainly confined to the cross-examination of Mr. Cooper, whose direct testimony of the day before has already been published. The witness was critically examined for nearly three hours by Mr. Andrews, but no particularly new facts were elicited. Mr. Cooper detailed at length the reasons why he was of the opinion that the will in question was written by George Duryea, making comparisons between words therein contained and similar words in the records of the Roman Brothers Mining Company, which were kept by Duryea, as clerk. The testimony adduced will be found below. Before proceeding to the cross-examination, the following question was propounded by Mr. Clinton:

Q.—Mr. Cooper, state if in your conversations with Mr. Taylor in regard to his will, he said anything on the subject of his own or his wife's relations, and if so, what? A.—On one or two occasions he spoke of his own and his wife's relations, and with regard to the disposition of his property, saying if it did not go to Kate or her heirs, none of his own or his wife's relations should be benefited by his death.

Cross-examination by Mr. Andrews.—Witness—I think the date of my first conversation with Mr. Taylor was after September, 1866; the last conversation I have spoken of occurred in 1867 or 1868; I am very certain it was not in 1866, because my first conversation with him was in the Fall of that year, and a considerable period elapsed between that time and the subsequent interviews; the conversation I have referred to this morning occurred in Mr. Taylor's office; there was no one present during any of our interviews when allusion was made to the disposition of his property, except on one occasion, when I think Mr. Marsh was present; I had an interview with him in the Union-place Hotel, when this subject was broached, and during a portion of it Mrs. Taylor and Kate were present; I became connected with the Roman Brothers Mining Company in 1864, at its organization, and I was appointed a trustee; I never "peddled" any stock for the Company, but Benson & Co. took some after I had told them I had taken shares in it; I had no misunderstanding with George Duryea because of his saying this was a swindle; Mr. Taylor did not take any stock it; in 1865 I was elected Secretary of the Company, and we had our office in Mr. Taylor's office; Mr. Taylor was President from its formation to his death, as far as I know; in 1867 or 1868 the Company ceased to transact any business; I am very familiar with the handwriting of George Duryea, who kept the records of the Company, and who I frequently saw write; I think the statement I made yesterday, that his handwriting was not uniform, like that of a business man, is borne out by the appearance of the records; from June 5, 1865, to July, 1868, Duryea continued to act in this capacity, and most of the entries I saw him make myself.

Q.—In your examination, yesterday, you said there were peculiarities about the will which you said were identical with his writing. Can you point out those words? A.—I stated the general appearance of the words was identical, from my knowledge of his writing; the word "seventy" in the will, by comparison with his writing, I consider to be his; I have not examined the books and compared them, and my evidence yesterday was based on my general acquaintance with his handwriting; this word "seventy" bears all the characteristics of Duryea's writing.

Q.—Look through the will, now, and point out any words that are identical with those on the records of this Company? A.—Besides the word "seventy" there is also the word "the," which I think corresponds with the same word in the records; in my judgment they were written by the same hand; when I spoke of the word identical, I did not mean to say that the words were exactly the same, but the words have a general similarity—the general characteristics of his handwriting.

Q.—See if you cannot discover some other words? A.—There is the word "real" in the will and in the records, which, in my opinion, were written by the same hand; I think all the articles in the will bear the same resemblance; I made up my mind that this is not the signature of Mr. Taylor, because it is wanting in his general characteristics, and not because of its resemblance to it; this signature to the will lacks the freedom of his handwriting, and is evidently more methodical.

Mr. Clinton drew the attention of the witness to several certificates signed, "James B. Taylor, per George H. Duryea," and submitted them in evidence with a view to show their similarity with the handwriting of the will.

The Court overruled the question unless a specific allegation was made that the will was written by Duryea.

At this point the Court adjourned until Wednesday next, at 12 o'clock.

A Vessel in Distress—Shameful Conduct of the Captain of a United States Mail Steamer.

The schooner James H. Moore, Nickerson, from Philadelphia Nov. 15, for Boston, arrived at this port yesterday, reports: First part of passage had the weather, and made the run to Vineyard Sound in thirty hours; anchored off Hyannis Dec. 12, and sailed again on the morning of the 14th; anchored the same night off Chatham in three fathoms of water; on the morning of the 15th, blowing a heavy gale from west north-west, parted cabling, and was blown 430 miles out to sea; for six consecutive days it blew a perfect hurricane from west to north-west; during the time, lost and split sails, chafed rigging badly, lost rudder-head and caused the vessel to leak at the rate of 6,000 strokes an hour; was obliged to keep the pumps going night and day to keep her from sinking. Dec. 22, latitude 46° 29', longitude 68, at 4 A. M. signaled a mail steam-ship steering west; bore down to us; we told him we were in a sinking condition; he paid no attention to what we said, and proceeded on his course; 35th, latitude 37, longitude 71° 30', was spoken by schooner Deuscan Cooper, from Demerara for New-York, who kindly lay by us twenty-three hours, but could render us no assistance, as it was blowing fresh at the time, with a tremendous sea on, and he had no spare sails; 36th, 12 M., off Fire Island, was taken in tow by pilot-boat Fannie, No. 12, and towed to this port.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

The attendance at the Exchange, yesterday, (Dec. 29,) was fair, and owing to the fact that several sales were effected, some little interest was manifested in the proceedings. All the transactions were of a legal character, the sales being made by order of the Supreme Court in foreclosure. The following is a detailed report of the day's business:

A. J. Bleecker, Son & Co., under the direction of Thad. H. Lane, Esq., referee, disposed of the business premises known as No. 228 Pearl-street, between Fletcher-street and Burling-slip. The property, comprising a brick store and lot 24.7 by about 62, was purchased by A. W. Hall for $24,250. The price was considered a good one.

Roberts & McGuire, under the direction of Gerritt Nathan, Esq., referee, sold a two-story frame house and lot, located on the south side of One Hundred and Fifth-street, between First and Second avenues, to G. Martine, for $4,850; also, a lot on the west side of the Bloomingdale road, north of Ninety-ninth-street, to Gen. Tremain, for $6,100. A legal sale of three lots on the south side of Thirtieth-street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues, was adjourned by the same firm until Jan. 19, 1871.

The above includes all the business transacted, and although the bidding was to a certain extent spirited, the market shows no signs at present of increased activity. Private transactions continue to be made, and in this branch of trade more confidence is exhibited. John McCLave, No. 44 Pine-street, reports having recently sold eight lots on One Hundred and Forty-sixth and One Hundred and Forty-seventh streets, running through the block, and 250 feet west of Ninth-avenue, for $16,000. The transaction referred to in this column on Tuesday, embracing the sale of four lots on the north-west corner of Fifth-avenue and Fifty-seventh-street, by W. A. Bigelow, for $200,000, was effected by Taylor & Stearns, real estate brokers, No. 1½ Pine-street.

POLITICAL.

DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE.

Meeting of the General Committee Last Evening—Another Bid for the Irish Vote—Organizing for Next Year.

The Democratic General Committee met at Tammany Hall last evening. WM. M. TWEED in the chair. RICHARD O'GORMAN, after a few remarks, offered the following resolution:

Whereas, The Democratic Party never fails to sympathize with all men who devote themselves to the cause of their country's independence, and

Whereas, Certain Irishmen who have suffered penal imprisonment in various British prisons and were banished for their connection to British dominion in Ireland, have been recently released and are expected soon to arrive in the City of New-York; therefore

Resolved, That the General Committee of Tammany Society, 1776, in behalf of the cause of freedom all over the world, tender to the Irish patriots a cordial welcome.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed by the Chairman, consisting of one member of the Tammany General Committee from each Ward, to take such steps as may be proper to give a fitting reception to these Irish patriots on their arrival in the City of New-York.

Col. ROBERTS, in a few remarks, seconded the resolutions, referring to the sufferings these men had endured, and that, too, for words spoken in this country, and stated that this Government had repeatedly declined to demand their release. He also said that at last the British Government, fearing that in the difficulties in which she was about to be embroiled she might be obliged to call upon Irishmen to fight her battles, had determined to conciliate the Irish people by releasing these prisoners. He hoped that a cordial welcome would be given them on their arrival in this City.

The resolutions were then unanimously adopted, and the Chairman appointed as the Committee, Messrs. Michael Miller, William Purdom, Stephen Kelly, Thomas Coman, William Duffy, Patrick Lynskey, Edward J. Shandley, Michael Murray, John Boyd, John Scott, Timothy Conyshell, S. S. Cox, Timothy McQuade, Albert Cardozo, John Riley, Henry Ross, James G. Hennessy, Daniel Quinn, Alexander Frear, Michael Connolly, Richard O'Gorman and the officers of the General Committee.

The Chairman then announced that funds were needed, and he authorized the Secretary to put him down for $1,000. Subscriptions were also received as follows: P. B. Sweeny, $1,000; Richard O'Gorman, $1,000; Walter W. Price, $1,000; H. W. Genet, $1,000; Judge Cardozo, $1,000; Eighteenth Ward, $1,000; Twenty-second Ward, $1,000; Eleventh Ward, $1,000; T. J. Creamer, $1,000; Ninth Ward, $1,000; Col. Roberts, $500; Eighth Ward, $1,000; Michael Norton, $500; Sixth Ward, $1,000; Sixteenth Ward, $1,000; Thomas C. Fields, $500; Fifteenth Ward, $1,000. The Chairman announced that the subscription paper would be left with Controller CONNOLLY, who would act as the Treasurer of the fund. It was stated that the money obtained would be used for the proper reception of the patriots and their maintenance while in this country.

Mr. JOHN SAVAGE, President of the Fenian Brotherhood, in a few remarks thanked the Committee for the liberality displayed by them.

The Chairman then directed that primary meetings be held on Saturday evening, to elect delegates to the Young Men's General Committee, and to the Tammany General Committee, after a address, the names of the inspectors were announced, and the Committee adjourned sine die.

POLITICAL ITEMS.

Judge A. P. ALDRICH, of South Carolina, wrote to an old political opponent of Gov. SCOTT in Ohio a short time since complimentary in relation to him. The gentleman applied to wrote back that he had known Gov. SCOTT over twenty years, and that he is a high-toned, honorable gentleman, toward whom the South Carolina Democrats would feel very differently did they know him as he is. Judge ALDRICH has caused this reply to be published, saying that, as he certainly would have published the response had it been unfavorable to Gov. SCOTT, it is but simple justice to give him the benefit of this very complimentary notice.

Hon. ALBERT R. HATCH, of Portsmouth, one of the ablest members of the Rockingham County bar, and Clerk of the United States District Court, is now reported to be the coming man for the Democratic nomination for Governor of New-Hampshire. As he is strong in his political opinions, and outspoken in the expression of them, he would not be at all acceptable to Republican voters in the State, but the Democrats could not select from their number one of more sterling integrity or greater ability.

The official announcement of the result of the election in this State shows that there were in Queens County two veritable "split tickets," the regular candidates for Governor being STEWART L. WOODFORD and JOHN T. HOFFMAN, and there being among the votes cast in that county one for John T. Woodfort and one for Stewart Hoffman.

The Board of Canvassers of Nevada, have officially declared the result of the late election as follows: For Governor, L. R. Bradley, Democrat, 7,300; F. A. Tritle, Republican, 6,148; Democratic majority 1,052. For Congressman, C. W. Kendall, Democrat, 6,821; Thomas Fitch, Republican, 6,491; Democratic majority 330.

The New-Hampshire State Labor Reform Convention was not large, but it adopted a great many resolutions and nominated a great many candidates. The Concord Patriot reports that the nominee for Governor was introduced and "spoke briefly and disconnectedly in acceptance."

The Chicago Tribune calls for an immediate reapportionment of Representatives, that it may determine the number of members of the Forty-second Congress, and the Western States thus gain thirty or forty votes in the next Electoral College.

The Pennsylvania Legislature meets on Tuesday, Jan. 3. The Democrats have a majority of one in the Senate, but the House has a Republican, the Republicans will have a majority of nine on joint ballot. A State Treasurer is to be chosen.

The San Francisco Alta asks the Republicans of California to declare at their next State Convention that they favor the abolition of the franking privilege, a modification of the internal revenue system, and the reform of the civil service.

Col. I. G. McKISSICK has notified Col. ALEXANDER S. WALLACE that he shall contest his right to a seat as Representative from the Fourth District of South Carolina in the next Congress.

The Democrats of the Second District of Connecticut will hold their Convention in New-Haven, on Tuesday, Jan. 24, to nominate a candidate for Congress.

Some rural Democratic papers in Ohio wish the next State Convention to be held at some other point than Columbus, that it may be free, if possible, from undue influences.

Mayor SHURTLEFF, of Boston, has never been absent from the city during his three years' term of office, except on official business.

The Knoxville Whig & Register insists that the people of East Tennessee do not favor a division of the State.

THE KETCHUM DEFALCATION.

The Latest Phase of the Great Wall-Street Embezzlement Case—Extensive Suits Against Ketchum, Son & Co.

About fifteen bills of complaint have been filed with the Clerk of the United States Circuit Court in suits brought against the former members of the firm of MORRIS KETCHUM, SON & Co., by various banking corporations and persons, for the recovery of certain sums of money and the value of certain securities deposited with the defendants by the plaintiffs previous to their failure on account of the noted defalcation of EDGAR B. KETCHUM, one of the firm, in 1869. The aggregate amount sought to be recovered is estimated at upward of $500,000. The complaints specify that E. B. KETCHUM embezzled a large amount of the moneys and securities held in trust by the firm for the purpose of speculating in gold and stocks. It also mentions that for and during several months prior to the 24th of August, 1869, the time of the discovery of the defalcation, the liabilities of the firm amounted to $3,000,000, while the personal fortunes owed by the members of the firm were considerably larger than that sum. The complaints also allege that MORRIS KETCHUM, the father of E. B. KETCHUM, schemed to save his own personal fortune, or the greater part of it, to himself, after the embezzlement had become known. The following is a list of the complainants, with some of the amounts which they seek to recover:

The Lafayette Bank of Cincinnati	$7,172 83
The First National Bank of Pittsburg	.....
The Rockville National Bank	4,287 50
The Merchants' and Farmers' National Bank of Quincy, Ill.	.....

Matthew Addy and others	1,728 00
The Third National Bank of Chicago	21,285 44

The following are the names of the gentlemen who are the defendants in the suits: Morris Ketchum; Thomas Bellamy, Jr., Franklin B. Ketchum, Lyndon Ketchum, Lyndon M. Swan, E. B. Ketchum, Augustus A. Robinson, and Charles J. Ketchum.

Mr. WILLIAM SHEPARD appears as solicitor for the complainants in the suits, and Mr. WALTER W. PHELPS as counsel for the defendants.

TERRIBLE TRAGEDY.

A Shocking Murder at Elizabeth, N. J.—A Son Shoots His Mother Dead and Escapes.

A most brutal and unprovoked murder was committed at Elizabethport, N. J., about noon yesterday, the particulars of which have caused the utmost consternation in Elizabeth and vicinity. So conflicting are the numerous versions of the probable cause and details of the bloody deed that it is difficult to obtain the true circumstances of the sad tragedy. Last night, however, Chief of Police KENNY believed he had worked up the facts to their source, and courteously favored our reporter with the following details:

MICHAEL DUIGNAN, the alleged murderer, was a member of the Police force of the City of Elizabeth, and went on duty as usual at 8 o'clock on Wednesday night, and was relieved at 5 o'clock yesterday morning. He then repaired to his home, but his wife says did not go to bed, but remained around the house till 8 o'clock, when he went out, and did not return till 10, and then he was very much intoxicated. Shortly after arriving home he asked his wife who gave his little son the dollar at Christmas, and she told him it was his (DUIGNAN'S) father. He immediately repaired to his father's house, and was admitted by his sister MARGARET, when the usual friendly salutations were exchanged. His mother was sitting in the kitchen, and he demanded of her which of them presented his child with the dollar. She replied her husband. He asked her where he was, and was told he was at work, and, without further conversation, he deliberately drew his revolver and fired at her, the ball entering the temple and coming out at the base of the skull. She lived but a few minutes. His sister declares she saw him fire the revolver. After perpetrating the inhuman act he fled, and up to 10 o'clock last night had not been seen or heard of, although Chief of Police KENNY, telegraphed to all the surrounding towns and scoured the city with his men in a vain search for him. The rest of the family observe entire silence concerning the sad affair, and one of them in reply to a question by the Captain, replied that she hoped that he would not be arrested, but that God might guide his footsteps, and save him from his enemies. The statement of his wife that he was intoxicated at 10 o'clock yesterday morning, is thought by the Chief to be untrue, as he was in the saloon of Mr. HIGGINS from 8 o'clock till 10, and had no drink, and seemed perfectly sober at the time. About 10½ o'clock in the forenoon, he visited his brother-in-law, MAURICE MCCARTHY, who filled him a drink, but he refused to take it, remarking that "enough is enough." The Chief of Police says he was financially embarrassed, as he was not allowed a cent of pay since he joined the Police force last October, owing to a disagreement of the Police Committee, the majority of whom objected to his appointment, but, at the suggestion of the Mayor, he was sworn in, and has done duty ever since. On the margin of a newspaper, found in HIGGINS' saloon, was a statement of the amount due him by the City, and in his calculation he included the whole of the present month. Prior to his going on the Police he acted as night-watchman in the New-Jersey State Prison. DUIGNAN has a wife and one child, and lived near his father's residence. It appears that the children of his parents have lived on unfriendly terms with one another, in proof of which it is said that when another son was informed of the murder he refused to quit work. DUIGNAN was born in Ireland, and came to this country in 1852. He is five feet seven inches in height, thirty-six years old with dark eyes, light-black mustache, and straight black hair. When last seen, he wore a policeman's pantaloons, pepper-and-salt sack coat, and blue vest with brass buttons. The Chief of Police was informed of the occurrence for two hours after it happened, so that he had ample time to escape immediate capture. A post-mortem examination will be held this forenoon. Great excitement prevailed throughout Elizabeth last night, and the revelations of the Coroner's inquest today are eagerly awaited.
